BRITISH MANDATE OVER PALESTINE TURNS JEWISH DREAM INTO REALITY

Judge Julian W. Mack (above) and Judge Louis D. Brandeis. Dotted line on map indicates old boundaries of Palestine; solid line the new.

When the Turkish delegates to the peace conference affix their signatures to the treaty of peace the dream of the Jew will have been realized. The Israel that crumbled under the tyrannical heel of Titus in 70 A. D. will be reborn in its native religious glory, but on American political lines—that is, if the Jews of the U. S. have anything to say for the treaty gives Great Britain a mandate over Palestine, and England has pledged herself to make the Holy Land the homeland of the Jew. Two great American leaders in the Zionist movement are Judge Louis D. Brandeis of the U. S. supreme court, and Judge Julian W. Mack of the U. S. commerce court.

Jewish Worker

Nathan Straus, internationally famed for his philanthropies and humanitarian work, is soon to start for the Holy Land in the interest of Judaism. While en route he will attend the great Jewish conference at Carlsbad, on July 4, as a delegate from the United States. He has announced that he proposes to do in Palestine, soon to be a Jewish state, is doing in other what the Rockefeller Foundation lands. He has already contributed more than $200,000 toward the establishment of a medical department in the Holy Land and has made it known that he proposes to increase the sum from time to time.

NATHAN STRAUS

The career of Straus is an object lesson to every struggling young man in America.

Born in Rhenish Bavaria, in 1848, he came to this country six years later with his family and settled in Talbotton, Ga., where he obtained a meager education.

Subsequently he went to New York, took a business training course and joined his father in the business of importing pottery and glass.

After his marriage in 1875 he became a partner in the department store of R. H. Macy & Co., which under his personal management became one of the largest concerns of its kind in the world.

Always an ardent Democrat, he took considerable interest in New York politics, but when he was tendered the nomination for mayor in 1894 he declined the honor.

Charity has been the background of his life.

After many years of struggling he obtained permission to establish a sterilization plant on Randall's island for the benefit of foundlings. His action lowered the infant death rate of New York 50 per cent.

Later he established a great chain of pure milk distributing stations throughout the United States and in cities of several foreign countries.

His aid to the unfortunate has extended to furnishing coal and groceries at cost. He has never desired the people who benefited by his efforts to feel they were living on charity.

He has been one of the world's leading workers in the international congress to stop the ravages of the "white plague."

Women factory workers in Japan outnumber the men by more than 1,000,000.

BULLS CONFIDENT OF CORN MARKET, TRADING REVEALS

CHICAGO, May 29.—Confidence regarding high prices of grain has shown remarkable vitality this week in view of the semi-panic which preceded. Failure of receipts to enlarge, together with planting delays, decreased production and Australian drought, gave renewed courage to bulls. Compared with a week ago, corn quotations this morning were 3/4c to 9c higher; oats up 1/4c to 3/4c, and provisions at gains of 5c to 7 1/2c.

It quickly became evident that many influential traders believed the drastic declines which had been witnessed were more than sufficient to discount depressing features of the corn market. Upward swings began.

NEW YORK, May 29.—Corrective measures again were enforced in the financial market this week, as indicated by the smaller operations on the stock exchange. The tone was steadier, however, and greater confidence prevailed.

The process of price reduction extended to the point where it encompassed provisions and other foods, albeit in moderate degree, while such commodities as textiles and leathers experienced further depreciation.

On every hand it was conceded that substantial benefits already have resulted from additional curtailments of credits, except in instances where this policy has temporarily effected productive enterprises, and legitimate business expansion.

The turn into June brought no apparent change in the local money market.
