

The Diary of an Engaged Girl

By Phyllis Phillips

Spent a fussy morning in the kitchen this a. m. Will try to put down my emotions in said place. They were varied.

It came about this way. Cook, the haughty princess, decided that it was high time to change her place last night, and with but a scathing adieu and about one hour's notice she departed, leaving consternation in her wailing wake! Cooks are so "objectionous" these days, as Nanny would put it.

Well, my better nature came to the surface, when I saw the harassed look come into dear little mother's eyes, for I saw that she was going to take it hard—she always has. The house and its affairs are her demigogs. (Word is not right, I know.)

I smiled at her bravely as I told her not to worry, that I, Lindsey, would guarantee to get the lunch, and if there was anything left of me after that feat, would try my hand at the dinner, too.

He must say that this announcement was not received with a certain call—nothing like it. To be sure, mother managed a twisted smile, and told me that it was sweet of me to want to help her, but did I remember that Jack's mother was coming for luncheon at one, and that she had a weak stomach?

My face fell, and my spirits with it. But I determined to show the world that I could do what I set out to do, and told mother same with efficiency in every inflection of my voice.

"Very well, my dear; but the results must be satisfactory, or the consequences will be upon your own head."

"I get you," said I bravely. "Now just let me know what foods are taboo."

Heart Problems

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am a young married woman, and have not been married quite two years. Before I was married I did something which I regretted later, and I told my husband before I married him. I know him less than two weeks when we married. At that time I had a sweetheart in the army.

I saw the old sweetheart the other day for the first time in three years. He said he still loved me and would like to be near me all the time and he wanted me to meet him on the fly. I can't forget him.

I told my husband about it the other day and he told me if I am not happy with him I can pack my duds and go where I will be happy. My husband doesn't drink, but is always too tired to take me to bed.

When I told my husband about my affair he took it very hard and said I broke his heart. I have been working ever since I married and haven't a thing saved. I am sick and tired of this life and don't know what to do. Please advise me. HAZEL EYES

Your former sweetheart is not honorable. A man who would ask you to be false to your husband would be false to you.

I believe you will make a mistake which you will regret all your life if you give up your present husband for your former sweetheart.

I can see that it is monotonous to stay at home every night. Your husband ought to exert himself to take you somewhere occasionally. He would probably feel better himself if he got more recreation. It is a mistake to sleep one's life away.

Weigh the situation carefully before you make any decision. Count the things you have to be thankful for as well as those which bring you unhappiness.

What's in a Name

PAMELA

The quaintly demure name of Pamela, generally contracted to "Pam" in this country, is a literary name. It owes its prevalence both to the fancy of writers and the fashion for endings in "a" which distinguished Queen Anne's Augustan age. Alicia, Olivia, and Lucinda are contemporaries of Pamela, having submitted to the same demand for vowel endings.

About the time that Pope launched Belinda as the heroine of his "Rape of the Lock," and Clarissa was fabricated from the Italian Clarice, the great Richardson adopted Pamela from Sir Philip Sidney's "Arcadia" as a recommendation to the maid servant whom he made his heroine.

English ladies who wished to be en vogue straightway adopted the name and history of that period is filled with Pamelas. It was a popular name among the nobility, despite its original application to a maid servant, but later it suffered a decline and became most frequent in the lower classes. Now, however, Pamela has returned to her own and is again enjoying vogue in the best circles. In this country she has almost become a generic term for ingenue or flapper.

The bloodstone is Pamela's talisman. It will preserve her bodily health; indeed it was worn by the ancients as a blood tonic. Likewise it is said to guard her from deception, especially of a lover. Sunday is her lucky day and 5 her lucky number.
