Miss Berry Tries Out New Schemes in Kindergarten; Work of Year Is Wound Up

Kindergarten work in Richmond schools during the past year, was featured by emphasis placed upon correlation between kindergarten instructors and those of the first grade, according to Frances Berry, kindergarten, and primary supervisor of Richmond.

This means, according to Miss Berry, that kindergarten teachers have worked with first grade children in the kindergarten rooms. The reason for this is that the mental development of a child of six years is not much greater than one of five years.

On the other hand, kindergarten children have been given more advanced work. This prepares them for the first grade and makes them more eager to learn. Although not required, several children when entering the first grade from kindergarten are able to write their own names and distinguish between certain nouns. Often they can either print or write their names.

The rigid schedule in the kindergarten and school was abandoned last year. The allowed amount of time for each subject per week was carried out. The daily schedules were flexible, however.

First grade children, under the plan adopted last year, sit in their seats less and walk and talk more. No child is allowed to bother the other while at work.

Miss Berry sent a questionnaire to all primary teachers last year, asking opinions of the new plan. An enthusiastic favorable response was received.

JUST ROUNDING OUT BLOCK, SAYS CARR OF PURCHASE

Willard Carr of the American Seeding Machine Company, said Tuesday the transfer of a block of real estate estimated at $15,000 which was recorded at the court house Tuesday, did not mean the firm was to use additional space.

"The part of a block we purchased is in the block we already own," said he. "We are simply rounding out our block."

The real estate was transferred from the Seidel Buggy Company.
