

START YOUR FIGHT ON WEED INVADERS NOW; HALT SPREAD

Weeds growing on vacant lots throughout the city are a menace to the home gardener, says the garden supervisor. In European cities such a condition is not permitted. Property owners are forced to keep the weeds cut.

Weeds should be cut at least before going to seed. This cutting will prevent the seed from ripening and spreading into adjacent gardens. After the weeds have been cut and dried they should be burned to destroy the seed and prevent a new crop from developing the next season.

Many of our common weeds are annuals, such as the wild pea, pigweed, horse or butter weed, ragweed, milkweed, mustard and sand burrs. They reproduce themselves each year from seed only. Thus, if they are destroyed before they go to seed, there will be no seed from which they can develop the following year. In the garden, these weeds can be pulled up by the roots, cut off with a hoe or turned under by hand.

Some Must Be Grubbed.

The burdock and wild carrot, which thrive in nearly all parts of the city, are biennials. They develop a thickened or fleshy root during the first year, and produce the seed during the second year. Because of the fleshy root the plant can not be killed by cutting off the top. It will produce the development of seed, and in order to kill the plant it must be grubbed out, root and all. The surest way is to cut off the crown, just below the surface of the ground, and cut them as soon as they appear, because the older and stronger they grow, the greater is their resisting power.

The perennial weeds reproduce themselves by developing seed and propagate from root and stem parts. The dandelion is a good example. It develops a beautiful flower and produces edible leaves, but if given a start in the lawn or garden, it will crowd out all other plants.

The large leaves of the dandelion are very annoying to the proper working of the lawn mower. They destroy the beauty of the lawn, when contrasted with the fine leaves of the June grass and red top.

Destroying Dandelions.

Perhaps the most effective way to get rid of the dandelions is to grub them out by cutting off the top of leaves just below the crown. Try to cut through the root crown. Use a sharp table knife or a weeding knife.

Salt, brine, kerosene, dissolved copper sulphate or strong acid solutions if applied to the roots will destroy them—but these solutions also destroy the grass and leave bare spots in your lawn.

The perennial roots may be starved by preventing the growth of leaves above the ground, and this is effected by repeated use of the hoe, weeder or spade and diligent digging with a table knife.

Weeds cut now with a scythe will not produce seed this season—and will help to reduce their number materially for another year.
