

CEMENT MATERIALS ABOUND IN INDIANA GEOLOGIST DECLARES

(By Associated Press)
INDIANAPOLIS, Oct. 15.—Indiana is rich in raw materials for the manufacture of cement but it is sometimes difficult to obtain the essential combination of factors for plant location according to a report made by Dr. W. N. Logan, state geologist, to the state department of conservation.

The demand for cement at the present time exceeds the supply, says Dr. Logan. Renewal of construction work held in abeyance during the war, extensive road building programs and transportation difficulties for certain materials have each contributed to the increased demand.

Raw materials for the manufacture of cement in Indiana are almost unlimited and inexhaustable, according to Dr. Logan, but a plant location requires an abundant water supply, ready access to transportation, high aluminum clays or shales and low magnesia limestone.

Many Natural Resources.

Numerous inquiries have been received recently by the state department of conservation regarding other natural resources in Indiana. Besides information regarding cement materials requests have been for data concerning mineral paints, rock salt, fuller's earth, oil shales, coal, refractory sands, brick clays and kaolin. Southern states are now the greatest producers of fuller's earth, which is used in clarifying oil and in fulling cloth. Transportation difficulties render it desirable that the northern oil refineries find a supply of fuller's earth nearer their plants. Suitable quantities of fuller's earth have not yet been located in Indiana, however. Dr. Logan believes that it is not at all improbable that such supplies may be found within the non-glaciated area of southern Indiana.
