POLICE NAB MAN WHO THREATENED LLOYD GEORGE IN PRESENT COAL CRISIS

Police arresting suspect before premier's house and, below, James Henry Thomas, leader of British railway men, snapped on way to conference just before miners struck.

Declarations of a struggle before Premier Lloyd George's home on Downing street, London, that he would "settle" the coal miners' troubles "in his own way" led police on guard there to arrest him. Fear that he planned some radical act prompted the precaution. James Henry Thomas, president of the British railway men's organization, is an important figure in the industrial crisis in England because of the fact that his organization may walk out to aid the striking miners.
