The Unknown Dead

"It was an inspiring thought which moved the two governments on Armistice Day to pay a lasting tribute to the 'unknown dead in the great war,'" says the Dayton News.

"In Westminster Abbey, where lie the remains of England's greatest scientists, scholars, teachers, preachers, students and warriors, there was buried the other day the body of an unknown Tommy, nameless, without identification, a fragment of the great army which went out under Kitchener's first call to defend the empire. And for centuries to come the simple tablet will tell visitors to historic Westminster Abbey where the broken body of one hero is laid, representative of the thousands who went down to their deaths on many a hard fought battlefield in France, with no one to mourn his personal loss and none to shed a tear at his passing.

"France, in like manner, paid the debt of gratitude to the unknown Poilu killed in defense of home and country. A magnificent statue has been erected in Paris commemorative of the fidelity of the soldier dead, and more especially those who served France in her darkest hour of need, and passed out of the day's reckonings without a sob from a loved one.

"It is fitting that such a thought should be given to those who died under such tragic circumstances. War is a terrible tragedy. It has claimed within the last six years millions of boys. Each of these was a son of some mother. Somewhere on the face of the earth, or buried beneath the surface of Mother Nature, there is a mother for the unknown Tommy and the unknown Poilu which have been accorded such magnificent and deserving honors. The pity of it all is that none knew the bleeding and bruised body which fell in the great struggle for permanent civilization. And yet, once upon a time, these self same men who today lie in honored graves, their country's unsung heroes except for the general thought which accompanied their burial, must have romped about and played like other little boys about some mother's knee. They became a part of the flotsam and jetsam of war. They buckled on the armor and went out at their country's call for men, and, dying, left in their bodies the emblem of all the unknown and unnamed dead in the terrible struggle in Europe.

"Peace to their ashes. They have played heroic roles with two mighty armies. They asked nothing but triumph for the cause they represented. They have gained even in their unidentified bodies a victor's crown. They sleep on while the ceaseless tramp of millions near their final resting place speak of a saved world and the coming of a new generation, made possible through their sacrifices."

LIGHTS

This wouldn't be much of a world without its lights—the sun and moon, for instance.

As I write, brilliant electric lights make it like day in my room. Last night I drove in an automobile into the heart of a great city. Its lights looked like studded diamonds set in a net-work of beauty. There were the lights of the street and park, the lights of great buildings and the lights of thousands of automobiles crawling like animate things all over the surface of the city's lap.

There are the brilliant spotlights that streak high into the air for miles, those that throw a halo about the actor as he rivets the attention of an audience, and there are the colored lights and the soft candlelights that our grandparents had.

Lights always inspire. They always give value. They make it safe for life during darkness, and long after the light of the day has gone they give the chance to read and move about.

Many people have lights in their soul. Today I noticed a blind man about to cross a street and I stepped up to help him across. When he reached the other side, as he thanked me he smiled and said, "Isn't this a beautiful day!"

Dinner Stories

The doorbell was ringing. Virginia's mother (who was dressing peeked out and saw a stranger at the door.

Virginia, aged five, was told to answer the door and say her mother was "not at home."

Following instructions, Virginia was stumped when the stranger asked: "When will she return?"

Without leaving the door she called: "Oh, mamma, he wants to know when you are coming back? What shall I say?"

"Does your wife object to your going out with your men friends?" asked Jenkins.

"Not my married men friends," replied Sheard, "but she draws the line at bachelors."

"Why?"

"She says whenever I go out with a party of bachelors I always return home greatly depressed."

The hoary-headed examiner glanced over the top of his spectacles. "Are you sure," he inquired, "that this is a purely original composition you have handed in?"

"Yes, sir," came the answer. "But you may possibly, sir, have come across one or two of the words in the dictionary."

Good Evening

By Roy K. Moulton

The test comes every generation or so, and the human race makes good much to the surprise of everybody belonging to it.

STRICT ENFORCEMENT

Old Bill Ballard, the leader of Half Moon Mountain, came home from the store tickled to death over a new photograph record. He put the jolly record on his photograph and Sally heard him chuckling with glee as if ground out the accents of a Scotch song. It was something about "I've got a wee-drop-in-the-bottle 'gainst the marnin'." When Mandy got the drift of it she snatched the record off the photograph and smashed it over Bill's head.

"Talk about one hundred per cent enforcement," Bill said, "Sally's it." I used to do all the talking, but of late I occasionally listen. I have found that I learn more by letting the other fellow tell all he knows than I learn by telling him all I know.

THE TWO MINUTE LIMIT.
While two-minute silence on Armistice day was being observed in honor of the dead, the staff of Silvia Fankhurst's radical paper scoffed at the mourners by putting on a song and dance. The mourners continued their silence till the two minutes were up. Then something happened that the scoffers ought to have foreseen. The scoffers got their faces pounded to a pulp.

It reminds me of the time when I and Ernie Yancey were the only radicals on Half Moon Mountain. We got into a row with Pete Lasher by talking socialism. Pete told me that "I didn't like the laws of this country I ought to move away."

"I was a quick thinker. 'Pete' I said, 'You don't like the laws of this country, yet you don't move away.' I then reminded him that he was a moonshiner in violation of the revenue laws. 'If the law gets you, you'll be in the penitentiary.'"

Pete went into the two-minute silence right then. It dawned on me that when he came out of it he would kill me. So I suddenly apologized, got down on my knees, swore off my radicalism and begged to be one of the boys. That saved me.

A few days later Ernie Vance got into it with Pete the same way. But he didn't pull in his radicalism before the two minute silence ended, and Pete's fist dished his face in so that he's a sight for life.

The moral is, that advanced thinking ought not to be more than two minutes in advance of the crowd.

Rippling Rhymes

By WALT MASON

THE IMPOSSIBLE

I cannot talk worth fourteen cents, and so no spels I spring; and much I envy gifted gents who make the welkin ring. Chautauques magnate play their game, and promise bundles fine, if I'll but write my moral name upon the dotted line. And often I am tempted sore; then I hear Conscience say, "What right have you, I ask, to bore an audience for pay? You know that every time you've tried to paint the welkin red, a lot of wilted eggs were shied in anger at your head." How much of boredom we'd avoid, how much of language blue, if fewer fellows were employed at work they cannot do! I'm weary of that singer's screech who knocks the notes to pulp; I'm tired of hearing blacksmiths preach, and seeing farmers sculp. I'm glad that I have sense enough to know where I'm at, and so I dodge the platform stuff, though at a frightful cost; for there the easy money lies, and there the soft snaps grow; the country's full of talking guys who trade hot air for dough. But as a speaker I am tough, which cannot be denied; I'm glad that I have sense enough to let the welkin slide.

Answers to Questions

Old Reader—Through the Questions Column of your paper will you please give me the definition of "grass widow?" A question has come up as to whether a woman becomes a grass widow immediately after a separation or at the time she is divorced from him.—Grass widow was anciently an unmarried woman who had a child, but now the word is used for a wife temporarily parted from her husband. The word means "a grace" widow, a widow by courtesy. In French (from which the phrase comes) the term is "veuve de grace." In the Latin it is "vidua id gratia," which stands for a woman separated from her husband by a dispensation of the Pope and not by death. Grace widow (grass widow) is a term for a woman who becomes a widow by grace or favor, not of necessity, as by death. The term originated in the early days of European civilization.
