Hard Cider Ruling
By Palmer, Protested
WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 20.—The Anti-Saloon league will ask Attorney General Palmer to reconsider his ruling that the use of cider in the home by its manufacturer, even after it has become intoxicating by fermentation, is lawful, Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel of the league, announced today. Neither the letter nor the implied purpose of the prohibition act justified such a ruling, Mr. Wheeler asserted.

Declaring the eighteenth amendment prohibits the manufacture of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes in the home or elsewhere, Mr. Wheeler said congress in permitting the manufacture of cider and fruit juices for home use fixed the alcoholic standard at one-half of 1 per cent.

The ruling, he added, should be reconsidered, because also congress placed its own rule of construction on the law by saying the act should be construed to prevent the "use of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes."

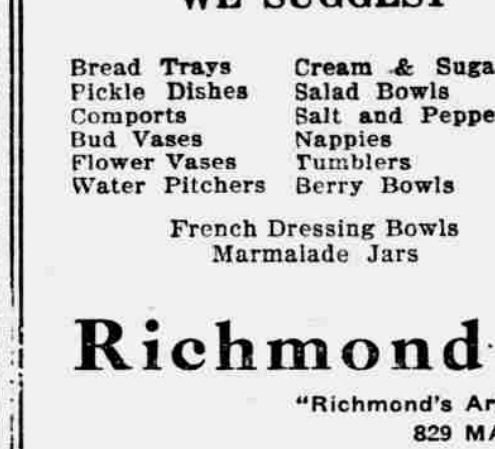

Daniel E. Edwards, a former member of the third machine gun battalion of the first division, after the loss of an eye, an arm and a leg in action, returned from an army hospital, re-entered Columbia university and won a degree. Edward's home is in New York city.
