Poland is a land of tears and sorrow. "Of all the new-old nations 'liberated' by the war, Poland's lot is the bitterest," says Frederick J. Libby, one of the commissioners of the American Friends' service committee. "Mothered by anti-Bolshevik France, for her own selfish ends, Poland has been compelled to don armor over her swaddling-clothes and extend the agony of four years of war with two additional exhausting years. With her doctors mobilized or dead, Poland is swept by typhus and threatened with cholera. Her people are hungry, naked and cold. Her southern border is beset by cattle by contending armies, starved miserably. Her eastern area has been devastated and robbed by seven or more armies.

"Crowded into huts and dugouts, subsisting on potatoes, cabbage, and a black bread that is made of everything but flour; children clad for winter in the one cotton garment of summer, they are predestined to furnish victims in sickening hosts for the epidemic already upon them. Yet even they are well off in comparison with the returning pilgrims from Russia who are coming back empty-handed to their native land."

Thousands of Refugees. Poland has thousands of refugees from Russia, some of whom walked hundreds of miles to reach their homes. The journey occupied many weeks and when they arrived in Poland they found their homes destroyed and farms stripped bare. In Werbkowice, the American Friends helped 54 refugees who traveled a distance of 1,500 miles from Buzuluk, Russia, the journey occupying three months. "Their clothing was pitiful to behold; scarecrows can boast of better," writes Harry Stevens, an English friend who is working with the Friends' Unit in Poland. "They wear home-made boots of plaited straw and an outer garment too thin and ragged to be patched. We asked them what they would do this winter and the answer was a shade of the head and a hopeless 'I don't know.'"

Mr. Stevens found the refugees living in hastily constructed dugouts. Six people, with their stoves and household goods were crowded into a hole in the ground measuring 11 by 9 feet. A man and his wife were digging into a hill beside a road. They intended to complete their home with a lean-to of heavy basketwork and clay. While the "building" was in progress, they slept in the open, despite the keen frost.

Live Under Canvas. A family of six was living under a semi-circular canvas cover that had been the top of their cart. Another family was living with relatives—eight people, five of them children in a house 13 by 9 feet, built into a hillside. For seven years Galician Poland served as a battle-field, and the rivers Strypa, Seret and Koropce were used as bases by contending armies. Across this territory the hurricane of war swept a dozen times. The land is seamed with trenches and disfigured by vast quantities of barbed wire. In the Tarnopol district 2,800 families live in dugouts. Hundreds are dying from starvation, cold and disease. These people have neither live stock nor farming implements. Their land was overrun by Russians, Austrians, Prussians, Turks and Bulgarians successively during the World war, and afterwards by the Ukrainians and Bolsheviks. Horses, cattle, poultry, farm tools, everything was taken. The sparse timber was cut down, their houses burned and even school buildings were destroyed.

Aid Misery. William R. Fogg of Lansdowne is in charge of the Friends' unit in Poland, which includes 55 people. Seven are Americans, nine are Polish and Russian and 39 are British. Clement M. Biddle of New York has given valuable aid in the recent reorganization. The American Relief administration, American Red Cross, Jewish joint distribution committee and American Friends' service committee are endeavoring, with limited success, to diminish Poland's misery. The Friends are aiding students in Warsaw, Cracow, Lemberg and other cities and have conducted anti-typhus campaigns at Zawiercie and Nadworna. They have a social settlement at Pasieczna, and a reconstruction work in the Werbkowice area. Refugees have been aided in various places. But the work of all welfare organizations is inadequate, and unless generous aid comes from America, Poland will sink deeper and deeper in the mire of her tragedy.

"It is heartbreaking," writes Miss Allison M. Fox, from Poland, "to think of these poor people without food, clothes or houses, this awful winter weather, and it is dreadful to see the poor little children walking barefoot and shivering through the snow, with blue, pinched faces and eyes that are old with a wisdom not usually found in children."

Two masked robbers entered the Liberty lunch room, opposite the Pennsylvania roundhouse in the east part of Richmond at 11:55 p. m. Saturday night and rifled the cash register of $50 in cash. Ed Welsh, waiter, and Mrs. Belle Brant, night cook, were lined up at the point of revolvers and told not to move or cry out.

The robbers made quick work of looting the cash drawer and escaped without attracting the attention of any one passing the restaurant.

No one but the two employees were in the lunch room at the time of the hold-up, the counter being cleared ready for the after midnight rush that generally comes with the change of shifts. The robbers were seen leaving the room by workmen coming along the road. The two men are said to have run towards the Nineteenth street bridge.

Robbers Evade Capture. Police were notified and spread a net over the city immediately which resulted in the picking up of several suspicious characters. None of these answered the description of the men making the robbery, it was said.

The robbers were described as being young men and well dressed. One was rather tall and slender and the other was much shorter and also slender.

St. Louis High School Girls Ban Extreme Fashions

(By Associated Press)
ST. LOUIS, March 28.—Rouge and extreme fashions in dress have been put under the ban by girl students at Soldan high school here. Their new "unwritten law" governing personal adornment is being adhered to rigidly, according to Mrs. E. C. Bristol, dean of girls.

The movement was started by the "Big Sisters," an organization of about 200 girls at the institution, who protested against what they declared was a growing want of personal taste. After other societies gave endorsement, the remainder of the student body fell in line.

In addition to warring on exaggerated styles and manufactured complexities, the girls have reduced the size of their hair puffs.

Dropsical tendencies can be checked by adjustments. Call and find out about it now.
