DAVIS, CAPTAIN AIR SERVICE, TELLS STORY OF FOURTH SPENT IN FRANCE

(Written Specially for The Junior Palladium by WALTER T. DAVIS, Captain with Honor in the American Air Service)

Having been granted a short leave of absence from my flying field, located in the central part of France near the small city of Issoudun, a very good friend of mine and myself decided to fly down to the historic, old city of Poitiers, which, being some two hundred miles distance, was not a very long trip, inasmuch as our small, fast airplanes were capable of speed of about one hundred twenty-five miles an hour.

Early in the morning of the Fourth of July we were up and away. The wonderful blue sky together with the beautiful French landscape as seen from the air promised to make our trip a very enjoyable one.

Leaving our field we flew directly over the town of Issoudun and in a very few minutes were over the city of Chateauroux which is very famous for a wonderful cathedral built, as I understand, sometime during the seventeenth century. From Chateauroux we turned directly south until we were above the river LaCreuse which we followed until reaching the little city of LaBlanc.

A word in passing relative to the valley of the LaCreuse. Many beautiful old chateaux were along these banks, some of them of great historic interest. You may imagine the beautiful view to be had of them from the air where it was possible to see the design and general contour of their many architectural ramifications together with the beautiful formal landscape patterns of their numerous gardens.

A Landing and an Accident

It was necessary for us to land at LaBlanc either going or coming from Poitiers to refill our gasoline and oil tanks. I decided that it would be best to land going down inasmuch as if anything happened on the return such as running into a very strong head wind we would be assured of having plenty of gas and oil which is a most essential consideration. It was a very still day. Consequently our landing would be very fast and I was fortunate to get my plane onto the ground without any mishap whatsoever. My companion, however, did not meet with the same good fortune and after landing a slight current of air caused his plane to swing quickly on the ground and tip onto one wing, breaking the end off of the wing. Of course, this was a disaster. It was impossible for us to proceed on our trip and you may imagine that the things I said to my companion relative to his flying ability were not particularly flattering.

French Celebrated Fourth of July

However, it was all in the game and we decided to make the best of it and remain in LaBlanc which is a beautiful city more or less untouched by the progress of civilization and clinging to customs and traditions centuries old. We found, also, upon walking into the town that the French had declared a holiday in honor of the Americans' Fourth of July.

The French celebrate a corresponding holiday on July 14, and in view of France also being a republic, having won their government by battle and strife in the same manner in which we won ours, naturally they were very sympathetic to our celebration in this respect.

We spent the morning and afternoon looking this little town over, finding many interesting buildings as well as observing a great many

SCOUTS TROOP 5 LEFT FRIDAY FOR FIVE DAY CAMP

OH, BOY! WE'RE OFF

So the scouts of Troop 5 probably said about 8:30 o'clock Friday morning as they set their faces toward the McConaha farm and camp. The farm is two and one-fourth miles south of Centerville and is all a farm, especially a farm that can be used for a camp, should be, for there is plenty of room well furnished with woods and water.

The tent and "eats" and other necessities for camp rode to the farm in a truck but the scouts (twenty of them) and their scoutmaster, Perry Wilson, hiked.

No definite program had been mapped out for the four days that the camp will last, but the scouts planned to take as many tests as possible, especially those on woodcraft.

The campers will return to Richmond, Tuesday morning, July 5.

TELL US ALL ABOUT IT

We are interested in what every junior does all the time, and especially on holidays. Where are you going to spend the Fourth? What are you going to do? Did you have some fire-crackers that were "fizzles"? How many fish did you catch and how many ham sandwiches and sugar cookies did you eat? Write a letter or a story for The Junior Palladium, telling us all about how YOU spend the Fourth of July.
