

LIMIT IMMIGRATION IN PALESTINE, SAYS ENGLISH OFFICIAL

(By Associated Press)
JERUSALEM, July 2.—Sir Herbert Samuel, the high commissioner for Palestine, on the occasion of the king's birthday, addressed a representative gathering here. In the course of his speech he expressed regret that harmony between the devotees of different creeds, which he earnestly desired to promote, had not yet been obtained. He declared that Great Britain would never impose on the Palestinian people a policy contrary to their religious, political and economic interests. Referring to immigration Sir Herbert said it must be definitely recognized that conditions did not admit of mass immigration. Among new arrivals, he added, there had been a number tainted with the "pernicious doctrines of Bolshevism." Those who were known to be Bolsheviks had been arrested and would be expelled with the exception of those liable to punishment for complicity in the disturbances at Jaffa. Immigration had been suspended pending a review of the situation.

Wants Greater Harmony
Sir Herbert said he was anxious that the Palestinian people should be more closely associated in the administration. Great Britain, he assured his hearers, intended to make provisions for the government of Palestine in an instrument which would be registered with the League of Nations. The interests of the non-Jewish population would be not only safeguarded by the mandate itself, but likewise in the instrument referred to, in which the future constitution of the country would be defined.

In conclusion Sir Herbert said: "I earnestly desire to see this land, the center of sacred associations for hundreds of millions of men, inhabited by a people kindly and peaceable. Most earnestly do I desire to see it progressing in quietness and harmony toward a prosperous and noble future. Let the government and the people unite in their efforts for the sake of this ideal."

SMITH COLLEGE GIRL TAKES COUNTER JOB IN DOWN TOWN STORE

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 2.—With the idea of some day becoming a department store official, Miss Elizabeth Boyd, a recent Smith College graduate, is working behind the counter in a downtown store here, selling every thing from frying pans to hooks and eyes.

It's hard work, Miss Boyd says, but thoroughly interesting. And she is learning not only the stock and the business itself, but the human side of it as well, for none of her associates knows that she is there on any different footing than they are. "Some of them were inclined not to have much to do with me at first," says Miss Boyd, "but I found the road to their hearts when I began reading the girls' palms for them during the lunch hour. And now I have more heart problems to solve than Laura Jean Libby."

Love is Common Subject.
"It is perfectly amazing," she said, "to discover how many of them in this place have been married and divorced before they are 19. Love affairs are the one great topic of conversation and interest among many department store girls here, and the fact that one husband has turned out badly is no discouragement."
"I like them, and I've made a lot of friends, but you'd be surprised to find how few I know have any idea of standing with their work or rising in it. With a whole lot of them, it's simply a matter of holding a job until they can get married, or until they can save up money enough to get a divorce, so it seems."
"Fresh floor walkers? Yes, they're not entirely fiction. I've come across a couple that my boss seemed much surprised to hear about. But of course, the girls wouldn't tell her."
"In a few weeks I've certainly learned a lot I never did in college, and it seems to me it ought to make me a lot more valuable in a bigger job, when I'm ready for it, to know what Nellie at the ribbon counter thinks about her employers and the world in general."

FIBER SILK AND WOOL SWEATERS MAKE MIDSUMMER APPEAL

The women who thought they could get along without that extra sweater have not been able to resist the midsummer appeal made by the fascinating new fiber and wool models. Here are three attractive styles which would tempt any woman to spend those few dollars she had decided to save. Fiber silk fashions the tuxedo model at the left. It is made in a funny weave with a braided sash and comes in all the leading colors. In the center is a wool coat in a plain weave with tuxedo collar in a block design. This comes in all the brighter summer shades. Worsteds also makes the sweater at the left. It is made in brown with a collar edged with tan brushed wool. Buttons on pockets are the same color as the trimming. This model may be had in solid color.

The Girl Who Had No Chance

By MARION RUBINCAM

Chapter 108 DOUBTS.

"Ruth dear, I'm so glad," Gaby was saying, holding Ruth in an affectionate embrace. She let her go to look at her. Then her sense of humor triumphed and she began to laugh. For Ruth was as white as ever and looking even more frightened.

"I must say that for an engaged young girl, you look lugubrious," she cried.

"I'm worried—about this other," Ruth turned to Myra, looking at her seriously for a minute.

"Myra, do you believe me now? I had no intention of getting Tim down here. It's true he came—he phoned and asked me, and said you couldn't come because you had to stay home to take care of the baby. And he came alone. He didn't stay long. He hesitated, thinking she should tell the rest, wondering whether Tim would mind."

"He was going as you phoned. It's true I lied. I don't know why."

Gaby made a little movement of impatience. But Ruth was protesting Tim so she went on.

"We sat here and talked about books and my work—and things I don't remember."

"Well, of course I'm not jealous," Myra put an extravagant accent on the last word. "Tim's very much in love with me—he never cared for anyone else and he never will. I just wanted you to know I could see through what you were trying to do—"

Gaby was still on her feet, her eyes blazing as she looked down at Myra. "Ruth, if you're not going to tell, I am," she cried out suddenly. "Don't be so smug and self-satisfied, Myra. You've married Tim—legally and morally he's your property, and you're not going to let him forget it either. But take care! You can't keep a man's love by repeating every day that you own it, and by doing nothing to deserve it."

"You'll lose him sometime. I know, for I've known more men than you ever had, the good ones and the bad too, and I've had to be clever enough to see through the bad ones. And Tim's no paragon of constancy."

"Ruth will never get him away from me."

"Ruth doesn't want him. She knows too many men that are much more interesting than Tim. Talking to him bores her, if you want to know. She's outgrown him, as she has outgrown you too. Besides, she's in love with one of the finest men I ever met. But all that will only make Tim like her the better. Watch out! It won't be Ruth that gets him away from you, it will be somebody else. You little idiot, I could do it myself if I wanted to! So could half a dozen women I know. But why waste time on him?"

And Gaby turned away, walking towards the window. She stood there, a slim graceful little figure in her light dress, against the dark silk of the curtains.

"As far as that goes, your devoted Tim lost his head last night and tried to make love to Ruth!" She paused, watching the effect of this on Myra. Myra made a sudden motion of protest. He kissed her. You may be able to imagine how unpleasant it was for Ruth, with her feeling of loyalty towards Langley. Now go on home. You wanted to find out about last night. Now you know all about it."

She turned her back, staring out the window. Ruth, feeling weak and helpless again, sank down in the big chair. Myra started to speak, and as she did the door opened and Marie came in for the tea tray. Myra stood there, putting on her coat and hat, waiting for the maid to go.

Again Gaby saved the situation. "Oh Marie, will you come here and fasten these hooks?" She extended a slim hand and arm. The tight sleeves of her dress were unhooked at the wrists. Marie came to adjust the little fasteners, a task that required some moments.

Myra, seeing the ruse, turned and left the room without a word.

As soon as she had gone, Gaby laughed.

"All right, Marie," she said. "Thanks. The Ruth I got rid of her without giving her a chance to say something nasty. Oh, what a relief!"

"But why did you tell her about Tim—kissing me?" Ruth watched Marie disappearing through the door with her loaded tray.

"She had it coming to her," Gaby remarked slangily, fixing herself comfortably on the sofa again. "She was so smug and sure of him, I thought I'd give her something to worry about. She'll go home now and get a little energy, and try to make herself attractive. It will do her good. She was getting too fat and lazy."

"But—"

"No, please don't scold me for saying it. She may row with Tim, but that will only be what he deserves. The coward! Ashamed to say he told you to lie to her? Hiding behind a woman! Ruth, how can you—how could you ever be in love with him? But it's all over, and you are engaged to Langley. Tell me all about it this minute."

"I'm not engaged. There's nothing to tell"—and Ruth suddenly turned away and buried her head in her arms.

Monday—The Visitor.

Heart Problems

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am a girl thirteen years old. I have no brothers or sisters. Please tell me how I might enjoy the long summer days, as I live in the country. I often wish I had a brother or sister to play with and have a good time. Should a girl of thirteen have beaux, such as to go to picture shows once in a while? My mother is dead. Please give me your advice.

LONESOME.
We are sorry to hear that you have no playmates. You must be lonely. You ought to enjoy going to the movies with your father or some other relative. Living out in the country gives you a chance to have a good time, however, which many boys and girls in the city would like to have. Don't become dissatisfied, but get the best out of life. Many little boys and girls are much worse off than you are, and still they keep on by smiling. Suppose you were crippled and could not leave your bed, or had to live in the slums of a big city. How much worse off you would be than you are now! Occasionally we forget to look at the good things we are enjoying daily. Try to read good books and keep busy.

Organization

Randolph county, addressed the assembly, telling of the situation there and how it is being met.

Fields Laid Waste

A striking statement made by Fields was the account of two visits to a field infested with the chinch bug. "The corn in a 16-acre field was waist-high," said Fields. "The corn was reported infested on Saturday, but not suffering yet. I visited it Tuesday night and eight acres of the corn were lying on the ground, and the farmer said he would be glad to get $10 for the eight acres that were left."

A very heavy dust mulch, maintained in the furrows, has been effective in preventing the bugs from crossing, according to Fields. "In one furrow where the farmer had dragged a plank up and down until the dust was about three inches deep not one in a thousand bugs had been able to crawl up the side of the furrow into the corn. The furrow was alive with the bugs, and so hard had they tried to scale the sliding barrier that a three-inch belt of dead bugs, killed by exhaustion and the sun, was lying along the side of the furrow. This farmer had no oil, but had been able to hold the bugs with the dust furrow."

Four Weeks' Warfare

Four weeks of warfare may be necessary to defeat the invaders of the corn fields, according to advice of county agents present Friday night. Bugs will be hatching out for that length of time, but if the corn can be kept free of them for that long, it will be out of danger, and what bugs come on after that time will do little damage. Burning hedges now this winter will clean up the others.

Township meetings have been called for Saturday night by the farmers' associations in Clay, Webster and Jefferson townships. All farmers, irrespective of membership, are strongly urged to attend the meetings in their townships, as the bug elimination must be a community affair, and while direction may be undertaken by the farm bureau, its own membership is insufficient to succeed without the help of other farmers who are also suffering from the pest.

Tuesday night meetings are scheduled for Center and for Boston townships. These meetings will canvass the situation and lay plans for campaigns.

Damage Is Certain.
Although a few farmers in the county have felt that the bugs would do little damage, this was emphatically denied by those who attended the meeting. "If any one believes these bugs will not hurt him, I would like to donate him a bushel to experiment with," said Alex Hansen, of Jackson township. "I will give them to him, and help him gather them up."

Ben Hardman, of south of Hagerstown, who was present, also testifies to the destructive effects of the insects. He states that he had a five-acre field of fine millet completely destroyed within a few days last year. Other farmers who have the chinch bug on their farms, say that with as many as are frequently present, corn will begin to wilt within two days after being first attacked while it will be completely killed within a few days after the first bugs are seen. Many cases of severe damage to oats are reported also. Another development Friday was the discovery that chinch bugs are hatching out in a corn field belonging to H. J. Davison, four miles northwest of Centerville. This is the first instance of the sort that has been reported and must be due to late spring broods that laid eggs in the early corn.

Barrier Lines.
Barrier lines may be established with salt or lime, moistened with kerosene, if other material cannot be obtained. The best method is to plow a furrow ahead of the bugs, making it as deep as possible, throwing the dirt away from the bugs. Drag a pole or plank through the furrow, making it as dusty as possible. Then dig postholes at least every 20 feet, flaring out the tops to a funnel shape. With a good dust mulch in the furrow, it should hold the bugs, but for safety, a barrier line of crude oil, barrie oil, salt or lime moistened with coal oil, should be laid also, on the top of the plowed ground. The line should be patrolled and the bugs killed in the holes with a spray of kerosene or a spray made by mixing a half pound of laundry soap, dissolved in hot water, with two gallons of kerosene, mixing well, and adding 15 gallons of water. Each time the holes are sprayed, dust should be scattered on the slopes of the holes, which will make the holes absolutely impossible for the bugs to climb out of.
