Kerr, D.D.
Evening—Song service, conducted by J. L. Sheffer and choir; invocation, announcements, special music, sermon "The Christian's Highest Joy," the pastor; hymn and benediction.

PICK LAFAYETTE MAN TO HEAD HIBERNIANS

MUNCIE, Ind., Sept. 14.—The nineteenth biennial state convention of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, assembled here yesterday, re-elected President I. P. McHugh of Lafayette. The other officers elected are Nicholas Carroll, Indianapolis, vice president; Michael J. Shea, Fort Wayne, secretary; James McCarthy of Whiting, treasurer, to succeed Bartholomew O'Leary of Indianapolis, and E. J. Houlihan of Muncie, chaplain.
Officers elected by the Ladies' Auxiliary of the order are Mrs. Mary O'Donnell, Indianapolis, president; Mrs. Mary Hurt, Terre Haute, vice president; Miss Florence Kearney, Logansport, secretary; Miss Mary Grace Kokomo, treasurer, and Miss Margaret McCormick, Lafayette, chair lady of Irish history.

Send Wire to DeValera.
A resolution was adopted requesting the president, the senate and house of representatives to give an example to the nations of the world by immediately recognizing the Irish republic as now established to be a free and independent nation.

The delegates voted to send a telegram of sincere greetings to President DeValera and the Dail Eireann, expressing the hope that the independence of Ireland will be accomplished in the near future. A similar telegram was sent to the ladies' auxiliary of the order.

Short addresses were made during the day by James Deery, national president, and Mgr. F. H. Gavisk, both of Indianapolis. The business of the convention will be completed Wednesday.

WILL WON'T LET SONS SMOKE OR WIDOW WED

CHICAGO, Sept. 14.—If either of the two sons of the late Fred H. Atwood, widely known Chicago attorney, use tobacco or alcoholic drinks of any kind during the life of their mother, they will forfeit an inheritance of $400,000, under the terms of their father's will, which was made public late yesterday. If the widow remarries, she will be deprived of the bequest made to her, according to the will. The sons are Ephraim Henry Atwood and Ivan J. B. Atwood, members of a local law firm.

The "Gloria Scott"

By SIR ARTHUR CONAN DOYLE

"We were dashing along the smooth white country road with the long stretch of the Broad in front of us glimmering in the red light of the setting sun. From a grove upon our left I could already see the high chimneys and the flag-staff which marked the squire's dwelling."

"My father made the fellow gardener, said my companion, 'and then, as that did not satisfy him, he was promoted to be butler. The house seemed to be at his mercy, and he wandered about and did what he chose in it. The maids complained of his drunken habits and his vile language. The dad raised their wages all round to recompense them for the annoyance. The fellow would take the boat and my father's best gun and treat himself to little shooting trips. And all this with such a sneering, leering, insolent face that I would have knocked him down twenty times over if he had been a man of my own age. I tell you, Holmes, I have had to keep a tight hold upon myself all this time, and now I am asking myself whether, if I had let myself go a little more, I might not have been a wiser man."

"Well, matters went from bad to worse with us, and this animal Hudson became more and more intrusive, until at last, on his making some insolent reply to my father in my presence one day, I took him by the shoulders and turned him out of the room. He slunk away with a livid face and two venomous eyes which uttered more threats than his tongue could do. I don't know what passed between the poor dad and him after that, but dad came to me next day and asked me whether I would mind apologizing to Hudson. I refused, as you can imagine, and asked my father how he could allow such a wretch to take such liberties with himself and his household."

"Ah, my boy," said he, "it is all very well to talk, but you don't know how I am placed. But you shall know, Victor. I'll see that you shall know, come what may. You wouldn't believe harm of your poor old father, would you, lad?" He was very much moved, and shut himself up in the study all day, where I could see through the window that he was writing busily.

"That evening there came what seemed to me to be a grand release, for Hudson told us that he was going to leave us. He walked into the dining-room as we sat after dinner, and announced his intention in the thick voice of a half-drunken man.

"I've had enough of Norfolk," said he. "I'll run down to Mr. Beddoes in Hampshire. He'll be as glad to see me as you were, I dare say."

"You're not going away in an unkind spirit, Hudson, I hope," said my father, with a tameness which made my blood boil.

"I've not had my 'pology,' said he sulkily, glancing in my direction. "Victor, you will acknowledge that you have used this worthy fellow rather roughly," said the dad, turning to me.

"On the contrary, I think that we have both shown extraordinary patience toward him," I answered. "Oh, you do, do you?" he snarled. "Very good, mate. We'll see about that!"

"He slouched out of the room, and half an hour afterwards left the house, leaving my father in a state of pitiable nervousness. Night after night I heard him pacing his room, and it was just as he was recovering his confidence that the blow did at last fall."

"And how?" I asked eagerly. "In a most extraordinary fashion. A letter arriving for my father yesterday evening bearing the Fordingbridge postmark. My father read it, clasped both his hands to his head, and began running round the room in little circles like a man who had been driven out of his senses. When I at last drew him down onto the sofa, his mouth and eyelids were all puckered on one side, and I saw that he had a stroke. Dr. Fordham came over at once. We put him to bed; but the paralysis has spread, he has shown no sign of returning consciousness, and I think that we shall hardly find him alive."

"You horrify me, Trevor!" I cried. "What then could have been in this letter to cause so dreadful a result?" "Nothing. There lies the inexplicable part of it. The message was absurd and trivial. Ah, my God, it is as I feared!"

"As he spoke we came round the curve of the avenue, and saw in the fading light that every blind in the house had been drawn down. As we dashed up to the door, my friend's face convulsed with grief, a gentleman in black emerged from it."

"When did it happen, doctor?" asked Trevor. "Almost immediately after you left."

"Did he recover consciousness?" "For an instant before the end."

"Any message for me?" "Only that the papers were in the back drawer of the Japanese cabinet."

"My friend ascended with the doctor to the chamber of death, while I remained in the study, turning the whole matter over and over in my head, and feeling as somber as ever I had done in my life. What was the past of this Trevor, puglist, traveller, and gold-digger, and how had he placed himself in the power of this acid-faced seaman? Why, too, should he faint at an allusion to the half-effaced initials upon his arm, and die of fright when he had a letter from Fordingham? Then I remembered that Fordingham was in Hampshire, and that this Mr. Beddoes, whom the seaman had gone to visit and presumably to blackmail, had also been mentioned as living in Hampshire. The letter, then, might either come from Hudson, the seaman, saying that he had betrayed the guilty secret which appeared to exist, or it might come from Beddoes, warning an old confederate that such a betrayal was imminent. So far it seemed clear enough. But then how could this letter be trivial and grotesque, as described by the son? He must have misread it. If so, it must have been one of those ingenious codes which mean one thing while they seem to mean another. I must see this letter. If there were a hidden meaning in it, I was confident that I could pluck it forth. For an hour I sat pondering over it in the gloom, until at last a weeping maid brought in a lamp, and close at her heels came my friend Trevor, pale but composed, with these very papers which lie upon my knee held in his grasp. He sat down opposite to me, drew the lamp to the edge of the table, and handed me a short note scribbled, as you see, upon a single sheet of gray paper. 'The supply of game for London is going steadily up,' it ran. 'Head-keeper Hudson, we believe, has been now told to receive all orders for fly-paper and for preservation of your hen-pheasant's life.'

Republican senators who are frequently referred to as progressives, and he is popular with the new Republican senators.

Several of the new Republican members of the senate have been inclined to complain that Senator Lodge has not consulted with them on questions of party policy. The progressive bloc has at times objected to Lodge's conservative leadership.

Face Great Program
The program of business which will confront the senate when it re-assembles is so great in magnitude that unless the senate creates a system under which it may be put through its accomplishments in accordance with President Harding's repeated recommendations cannot be counted upon. This explains the effort now being made to strengthen the Republican organization to meet the severe test of the party's ability to legislate.

This program includes the following subjects, in the order of their importance as viewed by most of the Republican senators. The internal revenue taxation bill, the railroad refunding bill, the funding of the foreign debts of $11,000,000,000, the tariff, the peace treaty with Germany, the Newberry election case, proposed repeal of the
