

EIGHT BOYS, 6 GIRLS OF PREBLE TO ATTEND COLLEGE 'CLUB WEEK'

(Special to the Palladium)
EATON, Ohio, Nov. 2.—Eight girls and six boys members of Preble county boys and girls clubs for the past summer, will attend the Ohio State University during "club week" the third week of November, at the expense of the university, the county fair board and the Preble county farm bureau.

This trip is given as a prize for the club work engaged in by the boys and girls. They will be lodged for the week in the most modern downtown hotels, and be guests of honor throughout a week of talks, stunts and events arranged especially for them by officials of the university.

The attendance from the whole state will be 600.

The youngsters will observe farm hours, rising in time for a 8 o'clock breakfast. Separate instructions in agriculture and home economics for boys and girls will begin at 9 o'clock; at mid-morning there will be an hour of group recreation, conducted by specialists in organized play on the university staff.

General Meetings
General meetings for both the boys and girls will come mainly in the afternoon and at night. At these meetings, say those arranging the program, the effort will be less to inform than to inspire. Leading men and women of the farm world will talk to the youngsters.

Community Service Music Memory Contest

A contest inaugurated by Richmond Community Service in recognizing 24 melodies by listening to them.

Selection No. Eight—Dance Macabre (dance of death). By Charles Camille Saint-Saens, (born 1835; still living).

Story Telling Music.

Music usually attempts to do little more than express or suggest a mood. Occasionally, however, a composer, such as the veteran Frenchman Saint-Saens, tries to make it tell a story, or at least illustrate a story which someone has already put into words. The "Dance of Death" is one of four symphonic poems written by this renowned French composer. These compositions are "program music," because they are dependent for their inspiration upon some poetic basis.

A Story of Many Ghosts.

According to tradition, once a year—on Halloween—all skeletons, under the leadership of Death himself, are allowed to emerge from their tombs and indulge in ghostly revels until the break of day. The opening tones of this grotesque composition based upon a poem by Cazalis suggest the tolling of the midnight bells, the signal for the appearance of the ghosts. Death summons them by tuning his fiddle which has been sadly neglected for an entire year. With his bony heel he clicks out the time on a tombstone as he starts his weird tune. With rattling bones, represented in the music by the hollow sound of the xylophone, the skeletons scamper forth and begin their wild dance. They romp through the graveyard, now near and now far, as the curiously distorted waltz tune is played by their leader. Eventually the sound of the cock is heard and all the dancers hurry back to the tombs. Death lingers for a moment to play a plaintive strain before he, too, abandons music for another year.

Free and Restricted Listening.
In listening to the composition one should both give free rein to his imagination and also notice carefully the ingenious means by which Saint-Saens has obtained his strange effects—the curious instrumental combination such as harp, oboe, tuba, English horn and xylophone, and the varied ways in which each instrument is used. The violin, for example, is made to give forth both graceful and sliding tones on the upper or E string; sharp, biting tones on the A, especially as it is tuned; round tones on the D; rich melancholy tones on the low G; and, added to all these, picking of pizzicato effects on the upper strings.

S. S. I. A. HEARS REPORT ON GERMAN SITUATION

An interesting account of German conditions and her mental attitude as seen from within, was given by John Koll, who returned recently from that country, at a meeting of the South Side Improvement association Tuesday night.

Mr. Koll has been visiting his sister in Bavaria, whom he had not seen for 18 years. He declared that although the low price of the German mark, considered in connection with the immense debts would seem to show the nation in hard straits, it really is able, on account of the rate of exchange, to compete for world business and keep its labor employed.

Mr. Koll also mentioned the political strife raging between the present governing class with no social standing or wealth and the persons who were formerly the controlling class.

The annual meeting of the association, at which election of officers for the coming year will take place, will be held on the first Tuesday of December.

Patriotic Organizations Invited to Celebration

Members of Sol Meredith post will meet at the Westcott hotel at 10 o'clock and march to the church.

Columbia University is establishing a new course in motion pictures, the first of the kind given in the United States.

Everyday Ad-Ventures

Thoughts of a Discouraged Pup—
"Can you beat that for tough luck? The folks that own me are going to move away from this nice house, with a big lawn around it, into an apartment on the fourth floor of some building right in town."

"No more good times for me, I guess. No room to run around, no place to bury bones, none of the comforts of home. And they never asked me what I thought about it—just went ahead and made up their own minds!"

"Sometimes I get a notion that I'll run away. I'd hate to leave them and all that, but what can a poor dog do? All my friends live around here—it breaks my heart to move away."

"My owner's calling me to come up on the front porch. Wonder what's up. She's showing me to a pleasant-looking man. I like the way he rubs my ears—he seems to think I'm all right."

"What d'you know about that? This man has bought me—for his little boy! I've been advertised in The Palladium. How's that for luck—my new owner lives near here—and I won't have to move out of my own neighborhood after all!"

BANKERS OPPOSE HAYS PLAN TO RAISE INTEREST RATES

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2.—The proposed increase from 2 to 3 per cent in the rate of interest on postal savings bank deposits, as urged by Postmaster General Hays, was opposed yesterday by bankers, appearing before the house postoffice committee.

Discussing the department's statement that the increase would have a tendency to attract money, now hidden away in the home, Henry H. McKee, a Washington banker, said he doubted if large sums were concealed.

Why We Insist on Hand-Workmanship in Our Finer Men's Clothes

A piece of fabric is flat. The human body is round. This means that the fabric must be shrunk in certain places and stretched in others.

But shrinking and stretching is not all. The fabric must be hand-manipulated by experts to secure exactitude and smoothness wherever exactness and smoothness are essential to service and satisfaction.

And no machine on earth can do these things. Of course, machine-work is quicker, but even at its mechanical best it cannot compare with the work of the human hand.

We recommend hand-workmanship—and Hickey-Freeman are its greatest exponents in America today.

THE PRICE QUESTION—Our prices are neither high nor cheap—but reasonable and fair. No store can handle Hickey-Freeman merchandise on a shoe-string. It costs money. But we add mighty little to it ourselves.
