

FLY GERMAN FLAG AGAIN IN NEW YORK; SCENE IS DIFFERENT

(By Associated Press)
NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—Germany's flag today reappeared among those of other nations which fly from the tall buildings of New York's financial and shipping districts.

It was unfurled from the same flagpole, stop number 11 Broadway, from which it was hauled down in the spring of 1917, and marked the location of the reestablished consular offices of the new German republic.

For more than a week representatives of consul general Karl Lang—temporary Charge d'affaires of his government at Washington—had been preparing for a reopening of the offices. A score of desks, filing cases and a couple of steel safes were moved across the hall from the offices of the Swiss consul, their custodian during the war. Among the furnishings missing, however, was an oil painting of former Emperor William. The old consular seal had also been discarded and the official stationery took on the new dress emblematic of the new Germany.

Scene is Different
The flag today waved over a scene different from that which it witnessed at its last appearance. The building was the American headquarters of the North German Lloyd Steamship Line, now occupied by an American steamship firm, and the former Hamburg-American line building a few doors north, is the New York base of the United States shipping board.

Just across Broadway on the facade of the United States customs house the shadow of the German flag prior to the war fell upon a magnificent statue of Germania, standing with figures of other great maritime powers. The woman, however, "Germania" to disappear and in her place now stands "Belgium" remodeled by the artist's chisel from the same block of marble.

Across the Hudson from the base of the flagpole are the great Hoboken docks, the former home of the German steamship line. The ships including the 54,000 ton Leviathan. These have also passed to new ownership and to the protection of the American flag.

PROBATION OFFICER PROBES 116 CASES

One hundred and sixteen cases were investigated and 30 brought into court by Mrs. Candler, probation officer, for the board of children's guardians during the October term of court, according to figures made out by her in a report of the court term just ended.

Eleven children were made wards, nine placed in private homes, three in the Home for the Friendless, seven with private parties, seven were adopted through her office, and five placed in the colored orphan's home, according to the report.

Twenty-one men are paying for the support of their children through her office. During the October term of court she handled $1,065.

TO CONTINUE CLASSES IN AMERICANIZATION

"Americanization Classes" which proved so successful during the night school period of last term, again will be started for a more extensive work during the second term of night school. These classes, however, will be held at Whitewater ward school, as far as is known at present. The students in these classes are mostly foreigners who are desirous of obtaining their second papers to citizenship to the United States. A great deal of enthusiasm was shown last term.

The purpose of this class is to help the foreigner prepare himself for the final test of his fitness for citizenship. If after attending these classes, he is considered fit for recognition by the government, the government will send an inspector to test the candidates. If they pass the examination, they will be given their second papers entitling them to vote.

Mrs. Mary and Fessel have been the teachers of these classes in the past and probably will take up the work again.

DAIL'S RIVAL GROUPS APPEAR FAR APART. REPORTS DISCOURAGE

(By Associated Press)
LONDON, Jan. 3.—Rival groups in the Dail Eireann, which met today to take final action on the treaty of peace between Ireland and Great Britain, were seemingly as wide apart this morning as they were when the Dail adjourned for the Christmas holiday. Advice from Dublin was discouraging, and it was declared the situation there was dominated by partisan spirit.

Some observers asserted there was little prospect of the opposing sections settling their differences. The extremists were said to be determined in their efforts to persuade the Irish people that acceptance of the treaty involved abandonment of the claim for the establishment of a republic.

Their work, however, was said to be futile, and there were general predictions that the Dail Eireann would pass favorably upon the convention. Some correspondents asserted that the acceptance of the treaty would be due to abstentions from voting rather than the strength of those supporting its ratification. In any event final decision was not expected before Thursday.

Secret Sessions Rumored.
A Dublin dispatch to the Daily Mail said many rumors were current there last night, one being that it was possible more secret sessions of the Dail would be held under an agreement. It was reported the body would again meet in the council chambers of the university instead of the Mansion House, as it was thought advisable to exclude the public for the time being.

Another correspondent said the members of the Dail were divided into three groups—those favoring ratification, the followers of De Valera, and the uncompromising Republicans. The representative of the Westminster Gazette, dealing with this report, said it was indicative of the country psychology at the moment.

People Favor Pact.
"The great majority of the people," he declared, "are overwhelmingly in favor of ratification and are opposed by only a minority. This minority, however, is of a composite nature. Mr. DeValera and his followers are not prepared to fight to the death for the republic, although they oppose the treaty. They hint at other conditions which to a majority of their countrymen appear almost indistinguishable from the treaty. Yet for those conditions they are prepared to renew civil war. To the out-and-out Republicans the treaty is a compromise and a betrayal, as those in favor of ratifying the treaty."

Mr. and Mrs. George Smith attended the funeral of a cousin, Mrs. Caroline Smith, at Cambridge City, Friday afternoon. Mrs. T. A. Dean is improved. Pauline Smith of New castle, is visiting Helen Ridge. Mrs. Will Lintner entertained informally for members of her club and guests Thursday evening, at her home north of Green's Fork.
