Handley and Nicholson to Attend Dry Law Meeting
Mayor Lawrence A. Handley and Timothy Nicholson will attend the state law enforcement convention, which will be held in Roberts Park M. E. church, in Indianapolis, Wednesday, Feb. 8, 1922. Three sessions will be held.

Governor Warren T. McCray is to deliver the address of welcome, and the response is to be made by Timothy Nicholson, president of the Indiana Anti-Saloon League.

The purpose of this convention is to strengthen the sentiment all over Indiana for a vigorous and complete enforcement of both state and national prohibition laws, and to devise ways and means by which the friends of prohibition may co-operate with officials—local, state and federal—in securing such enforcement.

Those who favor a sales tax in connection with veteran's bonus legislation argue that it provides the simplest form of taxation and that the tax required would be so small that it would impose no hardship on the consumers. This is denied in full by those who are opposing such taxation. They insist that it will increase the cost of necessities of life at a time when millions of people can least afford to assume such a burden. They point to the fact that the repeal of the excess profits tax, luxury taxes, and the reduction of surtaxes will lessen the treasury receipts this year by a half billion dollars, and they contend that these sources of revenue can well afford to pay "reasonable tribute to the soldiers who by winning the war made such profits possible."

Retail dry goods costs in Indiana, last year, according to figures compiled by the department of labor, were considerably lower than in 1920. Calico, 24 to 25 inches, cost, per yard, $0.132 on October 15, 1921, as compared to $0.223 for the same date the previous year. However, the price is still high compared to what it was in 1915, when calico sold for six cents a yard. A comparison of a few other dry goods costs in Indiana, follows:
