"DANDERINE"

Grows Thick, Heavy Hair

35-cent Bottle Ends All Dandruff,
Stops Hair Coming Out

Ten minutes after using Danderine you can not find a single trace of dandruff or falling hair and your scalp will not itch, but what will please you most will be after a few weeks' use, when you see new hair, fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—growing all over the scalp. Danderine is to the hair what fresh showers of rain and sunshine are to vegetation. It goes right to the roots, inigorates and strengthens them, helping the hair to grow long, strong and luxuriant. One application of Danderine makes thin, lifeless, colorless hair look youthfully bright, lustrous, and just twice as abundant.—Advertisement.

The New Veterans' School

By FREDERICK J. HASKIN

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 11.—The opening of the U. S. Veterans' Bureau Vocational Schools at Chillicothe, Ohio, formerly Camp Sherman, marks the inauguration of a new policy in rehabilitating the disabled veterans.

Formerly the trainees were farmed out to various institutions. The veterans will now be taken out of these schools and placed in the government institution at Chillicothe. The government will not take students out of accredited universities and colleges where Veterans' bureau trainees are taking professional courses.

The school at Chillicothe is being rapidly equipped with modern laboratories and shops for classes in electrical work, printing, steam-fitting, engraving, carpentry, architecture, book-binding, as well as courses along agricultural lines, such as horticulture, animal husbandry, dairying, cheese and cream making, forestry, and similar lines. The school will be devoted principally to instruction in the trades and in agriculture.

The closest attention will be paid to the health of these disabled veterans. A modern hospital will be maintained on the campus, with an adequate medical and nursing staff. Disabled men in some instances are subject to dependency as a result of their condition. Consequently a recreational program has been planned to better the morale. Every accommodation has been made for the married trainees to insure the comfort of the student and his family. Model cottages have been built and furnished by the government. The cottages will not be of uniform type or color in order to prevent a military appearance. The grounds will have the appearance of a typical college campus rather than an army camp or military reservation.

The finance officer of the school will make arrangements with the various banking establishments for the students to open saving accounts, so that when they are rehabilitated or graduated from the school, they will have enough money to start business for themselves or at least enough to tide them over the period of transition.

The administrative head of the schools will be Colonel Symmonds who was chief of the Public Service commission of Cuba in 1918. He was chief quartermaster of the Expeditionary Forces during the Cuban campaign, and was later in charge of the public improvements at Port Principe. During the World war he constructed the largest supply depot in France.

Plans are made for the accommodation of 5,000 or more students at the Chillicothe school. Some disabled veterans have the impression that strict military discipline will prevail at this government school, and have objected to the plan on that ground. This objection is unfounded. Only ordinary discipline, such as is necessary in all well regulated schools, will prevail.

Advantages of the School

The National Vocational Schools will take the place of many inferior types of schools formerly giving instructions to veterans. The period of training will be sufficiently long to enable the trainee to completely master his vocational handicap. A system of adequate try-outs will be established for the trainees to determine if they have aptitude for particular lines of work.

When the original soldier Rehabilitation Act was passed on June 27, 1918, the government had no reliable data, either in this country or in any foreign country on which to base a program. The vocational rehabilitation of disabled veterans was a new proposition. There had been an attempt on a small scale to rehabilitate those men injured in industry prior to the passage of this act. The governmental agency charged with this relief under the act was the Federal Board for Vocational Education, which had been organized under the act of July 21, 1917.

Canada had already begun the establishment of a veteran rehabilitation program and generously loaned the Federal Board several men who had been occupied in this work. However, it had been found that the methods used in Canada and other countries were not applicable in the United States. The other countries worked on a smaller scale, with a limited class of eligible beneficiaries. Our program was planned on a more generous scale. The men who urged this program for the United States, however, contemplated that the maximum number of men eligible would be about 15,000. Today there are over 101,000 men in training, 32,000 awaiting assignment, and 425,000 men who have registered for vocational training.

The program adopted to carry out the rehabilitation of our disabled veterans was to utilize the existing educational institutions and also to place the men in training on the job, which was called "placement training." As a result, there were 3,213 men in training on June 30, 1919, and 40,193 on June 30, 1920, of which 10,000 were in placement training.

On August 9, 1921, that division of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, which prior to that date had charge of the rehabilitation of disabled soldiers, was consolidated with the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, as a result of the passage of the Sweet bill.

Col. Charles R. Forbes became director of the consolidated soldier relief agency of the government, the United States Veterans' Bureau, under this legislation. He discovered that the rehabilitation program as administered prior to this legislation was not giving the best results. The men in training changed from trade to trade, from shop to shop, from institution to institution. A very small number of men had been rehabilitated in the employment which they selected, or was selected for them, as their vocational objective. He also found that there was no supervision over a large number of men in placement training.

Those men who had entered institutional training in established universities and colleges were experiencing the least difficulty. These men who are studying professions in well known universities will continue in those institutions.

The establishment of the Chillicothe school, and others of a similar nature to be established in the future, will overcome many of the difficulties in the way of the present system of vocational training. Instead of having men scattered among several thousand shops and private schools they will be trained in a few centralized government schools.

For the purpose of obtaining experienced advisors, Col. Forbes called a rehabilitation conference, composed of leading educators and vocational instructors, to meet with him in Washington on December 23, 30, 31, 1921.
