Beauty Chats

By Edna Kent Forbes

This should be done twice a day.

There is a widely printed ad which informs us somewhat lugubriously that nine people out of every ten are going to get pyorrhea some day if they don't watch out. The worst part of the ad is that it's quite true. We all seem to take our teeth for granted until a toothache or a receding gum warns us that something has to be done immediately.

It's also probably true, as another widely printed ad declares, that a clean tooth never decays. This means that the teeth should be brushed twice every day in such a manner as to take the film from them and to get out every particle of food that hides between them. The teeth should be brushed up and down from the gums to the ends with a moderately stiff and a generous amount of good tooth paste. The brush should run over the gum a trifle, so that the bristles will stimulate and make the gums healthier.

The English have a terrible habit of having their teeth pulled when the slightest trouble occurs. Many doctors argue that unsuspected troubles behind apparently healthy teeth cause all sorts of disorders. The American idea on the other hand is that no amount of work is too great if the tooth can be saved. The ideal method is to take care of the teeth so well that there will be very little trouble.

This talk is only a suggestion for daily care of the teeth—the brushing that should come after breakfast and before bedtime; the rinsing with some antiseptic if there is any tendency to acid mouth, the use of a soft wooden toothpick (in privacy) to remove particles of food lodged between the teeth. Another day I want to talk about the sort of cleaning that will save teeth with a tendency toward pyorrhea.

S. C. L.—The mixture of rose water and glycerine is rarely used on the face as it irritates most skins, but it is excellent for the hands.

BABE—If your face is too thin nourish the tissues with a good cream.

GOLDIE—As your hair is Auburn, you can easily darken the white eyebrows by using henna. If you prefer to have them brown, there is a concoction made from walnut hulls that will stain the hair. This should be applied skillfully from the point of a fine brush as it will also stain the skin.

JEAN—The coarse powder that settles in the bottom of the Pileopore tonic is the sulphur. Always shake the mixture before using it.

Tomorrow—Talking Through the Nose.

All inquiries addressed to Mrs. Forbes in care of the "Beauty Chats" department will be answered in these columns in their turn. This requires considerable time, however, owing to the great number received. So, if a personal or quicker reply is desired, a stamped and self-addressed envelope must be enclosed with the question.—The Editor.

BERNICE RICHARDS SOLOIST SATURDAY

Saturday night's concert by the high school "A" orchestra will feature as soloist, Miss Bernice Richards, violinist, a member of the orchestra and pupil of Professor F. K. Hicks. Miss Richards began study of violin less than three years ago when she joined one of the public school violin classes. She remained in the class for a half a year and then began taking private lessons, having demonstrated an unusual talent for violin playing.

Her advancement has been very rapid and she now holds an important position in the high school orchestra and is also a member of the symphony orchestra. Her solo number in the concert will be "L'Argonnaise" by Alard, a flashy offering containing much "fireworks" and requiring the technique of a virtuoso for execution.

Thrilling Sport in Northern New York

Plenty of nerve and skill in handling the reins are needed by participants in this skijourning race, a popular sport at Lake Placid, New York.

Tiny Pomeranian Dog Is Center of Attraction

A Pomeranian dog, about the size of a bun, excited considerable comment on local streets Tuesday. This dog is one of a fine species. It has long silky hair, forming a ruff or frill about the neck and chest. It's legs are very small in diameter and looked as if they were about two inches long. It is reputed to have a very bad temper at times, but is very intelligent and interesting.

It was the center of attraction during its impromptu parades about the streets with its head high, assuming an attitude of indifference.

STATE RIGHT

university, in words which include the following:

"In the United States, in flat defiance of all our proclaimed principles and ideals, we are building a series of bureaucracies that will put to shame the best efforts of the Czar of Russia in the heyday of its glory. The glories and the success of education in the United States are due to its freedom, to its reflection of the needs, the ambitions and capacities of local communities, and to its being in close and constant touch with the people themselves."

All these related measures are reviving the old states rights issue. Broadly speaking, it can be said that many thoughtful persons both within the administration and outside it hold strongly to the conviction that the present post war period should be a time for diminishing rather than increasing the functions of the federal government.
