Everyday Ad-Ventures

After your visions of becoming a dazzling performer on the piano have nearly vanished and it seems that the efforts of those long hours of practice eight years ago are entirely lost—

For it's a difficult thing to keep in practice when you have no piano of your own and your job down town takes up six of the seven days from nine to five o'clock—

And your chances to cavort up and down the ivory scale are zero except once or twice a week when you run over to Mrs. McNichol's house for an hour or so—

Until one day you read in the "Musical Instruments" column of The Palladium's classified section where you can get a beautiful upright at a very reasonable cost, and—

THAT CHANGES EVERYTHING

Because constant playing quickly brings back the old touch and from then on the neighbors and folks at home think you're some relative of Rachmaninoff.
