

GREGG, COMMANDER OF INDIANA LEGION, SPEAKS HERE FRIDAY

Claude A. Gregg, commander of the Indiana department, American Legion, will speak at a joint meeting of Harry Ray Post and the Women's Auxiliary of the Legion, in room 306, K. of P. temple, Friday evening, according to an announcement made by Dr. George B. Hunt, past commander, at the regular meeting of Harry Ray post, held in the club rooms Wednesday evening.

Gregg is an Evansville banker, who has given his time entirely to the work of organizing and promoting the American Legion activities of the state, the doctor said.

Plans for a community dinner starting at 6:30 o'clock, Friday evening, under the direction of the Women's Auxiliary, at which the members of Harry Ray post will be entertained, with former service men of the city, are being formed, it was stated. The complete program of the affair will be given later. The American Legion band will furnish music.

Under the head of communications to the post, a letter from N. P. Fultz, vocational director, calling attention to the night school in the city, was read to the members. The former service men were cordially invited to attend the sessions of the night school.

To Appoint Representatives
A letter from the Welfare fund committee, requesting the co-operation of the post, and appointment of two delegates to represent the American Legion on the board of directors of the fund, was read.

Commander Powell was instructed to appoint two members of the post to represent the American Legion on the board. Past Commander Mather was appointed as one of the delegates. The other will be named later.

Ratification of the appointment of Commander N. A. Powell and of Benjamin A. Ball as new members of the executive committee was accomplished by vote of the post. The new members succeeded Joseph Connor and Leo Weiss, retiring.

Attention of members was called to the fact that the national headquarters will allow local posts to carry their members as delinquent for a period of 30 days only, after which they must be dropped from the roll.

Many men who were members in 1921 have neglected to pay their dues up to the present time, according to Adjutant Ray Umpleby, and it will be necessary to drop them from the list unless their dues are cared for soon.

The report of the sick committee showed that three comrades had died since the last report was rendered. The calls had been made on 49, that flowers had been sent to eight, and delicacies to 25. Wreaths were sent to nine deceased comrades.

Thirty Christmas boxes were sent out to former service men, the report showed. In addition to this report, the chairman added a report that 25 former service men are out of jobs at the present time, according to his knowledge.

Wait For Your Calendar
Although our Washington Bureau has what would normally be an ample supply to fill the demand, the response to the offer of a free calendar this year was so heavy that the Director of the Bureau has had to arrange for a second large edition, which is now in process of manufacture.

The average American has become used to getting a calendar free, and it is one of those things that he "wants when he wants it."

Our Bureau will positively be able to fill all orders after a brief delay. Those of our readers who have written for a calendar without receiving a reply up to this time need not write again. All orders will be filled as soon as the second large edition comes from the press.

In the meantime subscribers are invited to send in their questions to the Bureau. There is no charge except two cents in stamps for return postage. Address your letter to Frederic J. Haskin, Director, The Richmond Palladium Information Bureau, Washington, D. C.

The Records of Congress

By FREDERICK J. HASKIN

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 26.—The records of the proceedings of the great legislative bodies of the world have been properly kept and preserved for a relatively short period. For many centuries the British parliament rigidly excluded anyone corresponding in the remotest way to the modern newspaperman, and even such chroniclers as would correspond to the present day official reporters of debates. Samuel H. Gray, one of the official stenographic reporters of the house of representatives, has written several years going into the whole history of legislative reporting, with the result that a remarkably interesting and accurate historical account has been produced.

Samuel Johnson, who came to London to do any kind of hack writing that would insure him a living, was the first real reporter of the proceedings of the British parliament, and he had to do it in a roundabout way to avoid the legal consequences of publishing anything that occurred in parliament.

In those days Edward Cave was the proprietor of "The Gentleman's Magazine," and because of an official position he enjoyed, was privileged to hear the proceedings of parliament. From the notes he made and from memory he would sketch to Johnson what occurred, and Johnson would not merely outline it, but write out lengthy debates, the language of which was his own, but the action portrayed being painstakingly correct.

In order to dodge the legal consequences, these debates appeared off-stage when parliament was not in session. Also, as a further safeguard, the accounts of the debates were headed "Parliament of the Empire of Lilliput." The names of the speakers were skeletonized or slightly changed, but an intelligent reader could place accurately each speaker. Johnson did not particularly relish this job, and told Boswell a few weeks before his death that it was the only thing in his writings of which he was ashamed.

Reporting From Memory.
Two remarkable men named Woodfall and Radcliffe were the successors to Johnson. By this time enforcement of the rules of the House of Commons had been so relaxed that people were admitted to the gallery, but no notations could be made. Woodfall, without taking a single note, would write at the conclusion of each session as much as 15 newspaper columns of the debates, and sell this to the afternoon newspapers published the next day. Radcliffe performed the same job remarkably. When the day's session ended, he would post himself between two compositors, and from memory keep up a running fire of dictation of two different portions of the proceedings to the two men as fast as they could set the type.

Two Englishmen named Gray and Perry then purchased the "Morning Chronicle," and in order to get the proceedings of the parliament for their paper, invented the relay system of reporters. This system is followed, in a highly perfected manner, to this very day in every legislative body of consequence. One of the men employed as a reporter was none other than Charles Dickens, before he set all England laughing with Mr. Pickwick and Sam Weller.

Dickens had worked in a similar capacity on a sheet called "The Mirror of Parliament," before the purchase of the "Morning Chronicle," by Perry and Gray.

Even now the House of Commons is not entirely reconciled to its official reporters. They are stationed in a small sort of a gallery, not having the privilege of the floor, as in our senate and house of representatives. As a result much of the actual wording of speeches is lost, and much of the record of the British parliament is written in the third person on that account. The newspapers have a corps of stenographic reporters, present also. The official corps and the newspaper corps check their records one with the other.

There exists among the parliamentary rules governing the British parliament provision that any member can call the attention of the speaker to the fact that there are "strangers in the gallery," and the speaker then must order the strangers removed. This would clear the gallery of all newspapermen. Of course, the rule has been allowed to become a dead letter and is preserved more as a curiosity than anything else. Should any member ever bring this question up, parliament beyond doubt would quickly nullify the ancient law.

Older Records Not Authentic.
From diaries, memoirs, and personal papers of old time members, it has been possible to compile a more or less fragmentary record of the proceedings of parliament all the way back to the Norman conquest of England in 1066. Some historians have taken these records as authentic and first-hand, although they cannot be accepted in this class.

The first records of the proceedings of our own congress were semi-official, beginning in 1848. An organ called the "Congressional Globe" was published with accounts of the proceedings of the house and senate as nearly exactly recorded as was possible then. The relay system first introduced in England was employed in reporting the debates of congress.

Records of congressional talk and action before this date were compiled from newspapers and other unofficial sources by Joseph Gales. His son succeeded him in this work, and Webster's partnership with one William Seaton. They published a paper called the "Intelligencer." This publication carried accounts of some speeches and debates and compilations of earlier records until the establishment of the "Congressional Globe," in 1848. The younger Gales reported the two principal speeches made by Daniel Webster. Young Gales and his partner covered the proceedings of both the senate and house.

In 1873 congress formally took over the job of reporting its own proceedings. Then it was that the Congressional Record was established, which appears now every morning during sessions of congress, with the prior day's legislative history in it. The whole stenographic reporting staff of the semi-official "Globe" was taken over when the Record was inaugurated.

Common Garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use preparation improved by the addition of other ingredients. A large bottle, at little cost, at drug stores, known as Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," thus avoiding a lot of muss.

While gray faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time by morning all gray hairs have disappeared. After another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant and you appear years younger.—Advertisement.

RUSSIANS BUY, SELL CLOTHING ON STREET; HAS BECOME CUSTOM

(By Associated Press)
MOSCOW, Jan. 26.—"Skolka" (How much?) has become a general term of salutation in Russia. Everybody is buying and selling. There is practically nothing which cannot be bought if sufficient money is offered.

Trade is not confined to the market places. It is carried on everywhere in the streets. It isn't bad manners to stop a man on the street and ask him how much he wants for his beaver cap, or his astrakhan-trimmed overcoat. No woman takes it as an affront to be asked how much she will take for her sable stole or silver purse.

There are many well-dressed persons moving about the street in finery which doesn't belong to them, but is being shown in the hope that they may get an offer for it and have a chance to earn a commission.

Improvised cafes which are springing up everywhere under the direction of former bourgeois are frequently furnished with elaborate upholstered chairs and divans from some once grand drawing room. The walls are lined with oil paintings and tapestries. The porcelain frequently bears the crests of famous families. It is all for sale.

The cultivated waitresses are frequently money-changers who will buy foreign exchange or undertake any sort of business commissions.

Recently, a party of Americans, including several women, attended mass at one of the famous churches in Moscow. When the priests in their gorgeous gold gowns marched through the mass of standing worshippers one of the men warned the women: "When those priests pass you don't take hold of their robes and ask 'Skolka?'"

Give your skin a chance—you can't injure it cleaning with Blue Devil.

AILING WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE
Mrs. Linton Tells How Helpful Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is at This Period

Denver, Colorado.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for seven years and I cannot tell you the good it has done me. It is good for young and old and I always keep a bottle of it in the house, for I am at that time of life when it calls for Lydia E. Pinkham's help. My husband saw your ad. in the papers and said 'You have taken everything you can think of, now I want you to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.' So I let him get it, and I soon felt better and he told me I want you to take about six bottles." So I did and I keep house and do all my own work and work out by the day and feel fine now. I tell every one about the Vegetable Compound, for so many of my friends thought I would not get well."—Mrs. R. J. Linton, 1550 West 33d Avenue, Denver, Colorado.

After reading letters like the above, and we are constantly publishing them, why should any woman hesitate to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound if she is in need of help? It brings relief where other medicines fail.
