

UNIVERSITY EDITORIAL STANDS FOR WOOING IN BUILDINGS, CAMPUS

(By Associated Press)
BLOOMINGTON, Ind., March 14.—Humorously defending the charge that modern educational institutions operate as matrimonial bureaus, students of Indiana university in a recent college newspaper editorial claim that the advantages of such a scheme far outweigh its disadvantages.

"What is more natural than for the young people to gravitate toward the married state?" questions the editorial "and where would this country be if college folks did not consider such matters seriously? It is well recognized and accepted by every one, except man, that woman does the seeking. The truism being operative, why should not she have the opportunity to pick the best husband she can.

"Where will a young woman be thrown into the company of a higher class of young unmarried men than in college? There she has unlimited chance to fall in love with a future leader of the race, even while broadening her own mind and adding to her own knowledge. No one would advise her to turn down an offer from a healthy and intelligent young college graduate just because some one croaked, 'I told you so'."

"The present state of economic distress which postpones the average marriage of well-educated couples beyond the age of 25, or even longer, is unfortunate. Too many of our college men remain single.

"By all means let the co-educational institutions operate, overtime, if necessary."

Everyday Ad-Ventures

When you've had a house "on the market" for months and months and you figure that you might as well have tried to conceal the fact that you were anxious to sell it, from all the response that has come from your big red and white "For Sale" sign—

And you console yourself with the thought that it's a poor time to sell real estate, because you know there's nothing the matter with your house or the price you're asking for it—

But all the same you can't help noticing that there ARE some houses that are being sold all the time—and not any more attractive ones than yours, either—

And when you inquire into the matter and find out just why these other fellows have been able to sell their properties, you find that—to a man—they used ads in the Palladium's Classified columns—and you say to yourself—

"Why—I Never Thought of That!"

But by the next week your house has been advertised in THE real estate columns of the city, and it's been looked over by a half-dozen "prospects"—and sold!
