In the cases of both bureaus, the increases were recommended by the budget bureau, reduced by the house, restored by the senate, and finally agreed to in conference.

Battle Monuments
Congress is expected to take favorable action on the request of the secretary of war, transmitted through President Harding, for the authorization of a battle monuments commission which would supervise the erection of memorials to American valor in France. It is proposed to mark the following places of unusual historical importance:

Where the first American soldier, an Indiana boy, was killed in Europe, where the first American soldier at the front was wounded; where the German raid on the First division.
