

After Ten Years

By MARION RUBINCAM

A CHANGED POSITION
Synopsis of Preceding Chapters
At the end of ten years of married life Millicent Buchanan finds that she hates her husband. She has no reason to do so. Humphrey is very good to her and she has excellent social standing in the little town of Wissakegan. She decides, cynically, that after ten years all married people hate each other. Her sister Patty, 20, and ten years younger than herself, returns from college and a year of travel.

Affairs between Millicent and Humphrey grow worse and worse. When he loses his money the situation becomes unbearable. Millicent begs so that he suddenly leaves town. Patty is offered a position in New York. Millicent, Patty and their mother go to the city.

Patty falls in love with Paul Darling-ton, whose mother opposes the match. Humphrey writes he is foreman of a lumber camp and asks Millicent to return to him, which she eventually does. Patty goes to live with a wealthy friend, Mrs. Munn.

Millicent begins to fall in love with Humphrey. At least, she is contented when they go back to Wissakegan.

Chapter 97

Patty found herself in a very curious position as soon as news got abroad that Mrs. Munn had adopted her.

At first paragraphs appeared in the city papers, "The well-known society leader, Mrs. Grainger-Munn" (why are people who appear in print often called society leaders?) "has adopted Miss Patricia Parke, of Wissakegan" and so on with many details, most of them about Mrs. Munn's town and country places and her social success as a young woman.

Mrs. Munn had previously sent Patty to have some pictures taken—oddly enough she went to the same expensive photographer that Millicent had once patronized—and the result was a series of "art studies" which really brought out all the girl's delicacy and prettiness.

"Though pictures can't show your coloring, which is one of your great attractions," Mrs. Munn observed when the proofs came home for her inspection.

Copies of these pictures she gave away to papers and magazines which asked for them.

"Ordinarily I hate publicity, but the more you have the very beginning the better," that shrewd lady remarked one morning as she dictated her day's correspondence. "After all, you are unknown, and I have lived so quietly since Mary's death that I have dropped out of things. We'll grow conservative after your coming-out dance."

"I'm so old and so serious-minded to play the debutante," Patty protested gently.

"Nonsense! I'll have Marcelle make you the proper sort of gown—changeable silver and blue taffeta, I think, with a lace underskirt and rose garland—and Dupre do your hair, and you won't know you aren't 18."

Later she added:
"This is n't the usual sort of debutante affair, you know, my dear. This is to introduce you to my friends, more than to their daughters."

The local paper in Wissakegan was much excited. In fact, the Parke and the Buchanan families had given the grateful editor a great deal of good copy recently.

"We extend our congratulations to a resident, or rather to an ex-resident of the town," one item began, "on the occasion of her adoption by one of the metropolis's multi-millionaires. Great festivities are being given in her honor in New York and the lists of guests include all the best known families. We regret that Miss Parke is no longer legally a resident of Wissakegan and know her absence will be felt by our younger set, of which she was always a leading spirit"—and so on.

Clearly the editor was not certain whether he was to congratulate or condemn and succeeded in doing both in one paragraph.

Another excited item appeared a few weeks later in the same paper:

"An unexpected event aroused much comment and enthusiasm in local circles this week. This was the arrival by the 10:15 express of Mr. and Mrs. Humphrey Buchanan, who have taken a house on Elm Avenue, pending negotiations for their old home. If these fall through, it is rumored that the Buchanans will build a house near the country club where so many of our influential citizens are now putting up palatial residences."

There was more to this item. Paul read it to Patty with exaggerated emphasis as they sat in the drawing room together. But this was later.

Meantime, as soon as the news of the adoption had gone abroad, Patty found her days and evenings so full that Paul complained bitterly it was all another trick of Mrs. Munn's to keep them apart!

For now, at least, the puzzled friends knew what the girl's actual status was. The pretty dark-eyed Miriam came and called.

"I'm so sorry Paul never brought you to see me again," she said, so prettily that it did not matter whether it was true or not. "You see, I went away soon after your visit, I really had no chance to look you up—but I've taken this first opportunity when I got back."

Paul, who was fond of Miriam, believed this. Patty, who wanted to be fond of her and hadn't succeeded, tried to do so.

The rest of the time was taken up with dressmakers and milliners. Mrs. Munn was certain of one thing—her ward was to be the best dressed girl in her set of friends, if money and thought and good taste could accomplish it.

And at the luncheon she gave for Patty, with her own older friends present, and at the dance, where the older and the younger were all together, she was proud of her results.

Mrs. Darling-ton had suddenly left town. But one day the maid brought Patty a card.

And it read simply:
"Mrs. P. Trevor Darling-ton."
Patty turned dead white.

Tomorrow—"A Meeting."

Heart Problems

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am a young woman 25 years old. I have been very fond of gentlemen friends, but circumstances have prevented me from having any. I feel that I am becoming old and I long for some one to love and care me.

There is a young man that works in the town where I live that I am very fond of. I have never met this boy, but I dearly love him and I feel that he is the one man intended for me. He works in a confectionary store and nearly always waits on me when I go in there.

Do you think there would be anything wrong in my introducing myself to him and asking him to come to see me? I feel that each of us would bring much happiness to the other if we only had the chance.

It is not your place to introduce yourself and to ask the man to come to see you. Man is the aggressor and almost always he resents it when a woman takes the first step in becoming acquainted or after the introduction runs after him.

There are many lonely women in this world who have to walk alone. Very often it is because they are too reserved and cannot meet the man half way. Nevertheless they are true to themselves, and act as their natures demand. A woman with a nature that is too reserved should try to become more radiant and be more cordial.

Do not think, however, that she should go more than half way to make the acquaintance of men. If it is her lot to walk alone through life she should do so bravely.
