man, James Wickersham, John White and others.

Owing to the danger from the Indians, the settlement north was not rapidly pushed until after the year 1812. In 1815, Job Elliott and William Hunt of North Carolina, located near where Whitewater now is situated. The settlement of the county to the north became more rapid from that time on.

Founded in 1817
The towns of Bethel and Arba virtually date their history back to 1817 and to the Harlan family. It was in that year that James Harlan of Kentucky, with nine of his 10 children, moved into Indiana. The father with his sons Jacob, Nathan and James, located near what is now known as Arba. The other sons, including Valentine, Elihu and Joshua, commenced a settlement known as "Harlan's Settlement," which is now Bethel.

The Anderson families also moved to the vicinity of these towns. In the fifties, when the first census of the county was taken, the population of Bethel was given at 150 and the fact that it had a Christian church and a Masonic hall was given prominence in early histories. The town was laid out April 6, 1850, by Elihu Harlan and Joseph Anderson, proprietors. The Christian church in Bethel was formed in 1821 under the ministrations of John M. Foster. The meetings for the first few years were held in a log house.

Important Indiana Town
Whitewater for many years was known as Hillsboro and in the earlier history of the county was one of the most important towns in eastern Indiana. Its future seemed to be unlimited and, being a leading trading post for miles around, several modest fortunes were made there by early merchants.

Chester is situated three and a half miles north of the corporation of Richmond on the Newport and Richmond road. The town was laid out about the year 1847 by M. Thomas, a well-respected citizen who was followed by Eli Townsend, David Taylor and others. The postoffice was established about the same time and the name of Chester was given.

Chester Discovered
One woman, middle aged, who has always led an active life, is now at home helpless. Six children are in the home and she could not go to a distant institution even were the way opened, because of her children.

One 10-year-old girl, in the first stages, her life could be saved by hospital care.

One eight-year-old girl, whose trouble was discovered at the public health department clinic held in the Social Service bureau recently. She is one of four children, the daughter of a laborer, and the entire family lives in two rooms. Danger to other members of the family is obvious.

Seven cases, discovered in the public health service clinic within the last two months, were in the early stages. Their lives could be saved, and they could be completely cured, through hospital care. One was a boy 17 years old.

One woman now suffering from the disease is at home with seven children. She must be nursed there, as there is no other place for her to go.

Cases Discovered
Cases have come to the attention of the Social Service bureau in Haigerstown, Cambridge City and other towns over the county. All need care.
