

PLAN TO LINK UPPER AND LOWER MICHIGAN PENINSULAS BY BRIDGE

(By Associated Press)
DETROIT, Aug. 2.—The upper and lower Michigan peninsulas will be linked by a bridge for railroad and vehicular traffic if a plan set afoot by the Michigan Pikes association is materialized.

The plan for a bridge, that has been discussed vaguely in the past, has taken definite form following the recent tour of the Pikes association membership into northern Michigan.

In an address at Marquette, W. S. Gilbreath of Detroit, president of the association, declared present ferry service across the Straits of Mackinac was inadequate to meet the growing tourist and commercial traffic between the two peninsulas. Unless a bridge is built, Mr. Gilbreath said, the state should purchase and operate the ferry service, bringing about its expansion at once. At present the ferry service is privately owned.

Horatio S. Earle, widely known for his work in behalf of good roads, declared bridging of the straits would be no greater feat than was the building of Henry M. Flagler's famous railroad bridge over the sea to Key West. He said a straits bridge would do for Michigan what the Flagler improvements had done for Florida.

Seven thousand automobiles crossed the straits aboard ferry boats last year, against 200 annually a few years ago.
