

LONDON CHINATOWN MELTS FROM VIEW; CHINESE GO HOME

(By Associated Press)
LONDON, Sept. 9.—London's Chinatown is fast disappearing. Four years ago 2,000 Chinese seamen were living within a stone's throw of the West India dock gates. Now it is doubtful whether there are 700, says the Daily News.

During the war London's Chinatown had its most prosperous days, for quite a number of British ships were manned by Chinese crews. But when the war ended the edict went forth—"British crews for British ships," and as the Chinamen were paid off they either went back to China or to some other country where their labor was in demand.

The result was that Chinese traders in Chinatown began to suffer, and one after another had to put up their shutters. Then suddenly there came a boom. A beautiful actress died while attending an opium smoking party. Stories were printed about the thrills to be experienced in Chinese opium dens and public attention was focused on the sinister alleys and by-ways of Chinatown.

Open Restaurants. In which Chinese dishes could be obtained opened here and there in Chinatown. Many Americans visited them to see how they compared with similar places in their own Chinatown, and curiosity led a number of English folk and various European visitors to do likewise. At night they were often filled to overflowing.

Commercially minded Orientals invested their money in the exploitation of what was a new craze, and for a time they prospered exceedingly. But gradually the novelty wore off, the glamor faded, and people came to the conclusion that there was all sorts of cooking that was really much nicer than Chinese cooking. Visitors became fewer and fewer and now there are only one or two shabby restaurants left in London's Chinatown. What remains of it is but a shadow of its former self.

MEAD KELSEY STARTS HOME FROM ABROAD

Mead A. Kelsey, well known Indiana Quaker, formerly of Richmond, is on his way home from a tour of the Bible lands of the near east, according to information from the state committee of Near East Relief, of which Mr. Kelsey is secretary.

A letter received from him dated Constantinople, Aug. 17, stated that he and a party of relief workers who accompanied him on the trip, were about to sail for Beirut, Syria, on the United States destroyer, Litchfield, transportation accorded through the courtesy of Admiral Mark L. Bristol. The Litchfield is one of the fleets which has recently been dispatched to Smyrna for the protection of American citizens there who it was feared, might be in danger because of the Turkish advance.

Sent by Philanthropists. Mr. Kelsey was sent to Armenia with other officers of the relief organization on funds furnished by philanthropists who desire to know the latest situation among the refugees and orphans of the near east. An interesting feature of his trip was that just before leaving he was commissioned by a prominent Indianapolis man to bring back an Armenian boy to be adopted into the man's family. Secretary Kelsey in letters sent to his family has written of the great opportunities in Armenia for the Christian minorities, once they are let alone by their Moslem enemies. "The work of salvaging this nation is greater, much greater, than I ever imagined," Mr. Kelsey wrote.

Late cables received from the secretary and party indicated that he was to sail from Liverpool, between Sept. 12 and 15.

The Farm and the Farmer

FLAGS ARE FLYING

If you were among the visitors to Richmond on Friday forenoon, you would have noted that overnight the old town had blossomed out in a blaze of color. And why, sez you, because of the Fair, sez we, they tell the whole story of the gala attire in which the buildings are now robed. You see, a few trained decorators, men who can climb ladders and telegraph poles, arrived in town early on Wednesday afternoon, with a carload or so of flags, streamers, bunting, etc., duly prepared to ornament and beautify in honor of the coming great occasion.

The more you think of it the more will you be impressed that this indeed is an occasion warranting a bit of beautifying of staid, old business thoroughfares; also of residence streets and private homes. And you may be sure that every flag in Richmond will be flying from Monday morning until after the fair has passed into local history. And the coming fair promises to be historic in this, it will mark the beginning of a series of fairs and fall festivals in Wayne, the fame of which is to spread abroad in the land until Richmond, "the beautiful and wealthy little home city on the Whitewater," shall become the Mecca toward which thousands will journey in September days.

A Permanent Institution

The central and logical idea animating the promoters of the Wayne county fair, is the establishment of a fair in Richmond which shall become a satisfying, creditable and permanent institution. A fair having adequate space, spacious buildings, attractive surroundings and every needed item of equipment. Such enterprises are not to be built in a day, nor in a single year, but are never created at all until once well started. The fair of 1922 is meant to be the inception of the coming continuous enterprise. Now, then, let's all pull together to put it across. If we knew of any busier place right now than the headquarters office of the fair, or of any busier man than Secretary Hodge, we'd be glad to say so. But we don't, fellow citizens, we don't. We had intended telling you that Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Smith called on Secretary Hodge on Friday to enter their prize chickens, and that Miss Gray and Miss Black had filed intentions to show pies and canned goods and bread, while Grandma Clover is intent on showing some of the finest patchwork quilts and fine needle work. But we throw up our hands; the list is too long. And, anyway, you are to see for yourselves, next week.

Country Banks Efficient

Agricultural communities are doing their own financial business, it is to say, are moving their own crops with their own money, this autumn, in a larger way than in several years. In the latest federal reserve statement there is no indication that the reserve banks are being called on, preparatory to financing the crop movement, although prior to the war September usually saw large shipments of currency from the east. It is also a fact that during the war the reserve banks financed the harvest movement, straight through. It would appear, then, that farmers are not now standing, hat in hand, asking for help. They have credited facilities in an enlarged measure near home. Our own Richmond and Wayne county banks are supplying all the currency locally required by the farmer, and the Wayne county banks, in general, are doing their full share in this respect. National and state banks are now abundantly supplied with credit facilities.

Loans of the reserve system total less than one third of the aggregate a year ago and the reserve position has risen from 66 1/2 to 73 1/3 per cent. For these reasons the financial markets are taking for granted an abundance of credit and easy money to the end of the year. This expectation is one of the large factors in the support of prices in the securities markets.

Pigs Going to Market

The competition between the various departments of the Ohio college of agriculture to make a good showing at the state fair, resulted in some very fine displays. One that attracted considerable attention was a wooden pig that went to market. This was a running, climbing and diving pig that travelled over hills, built of sod and to a scale which accurately showed all the ups and downs of the hog market in the past ten years. Every time the pig reached a crest and plunged it meant a bad break in the market, and there were road signs to show the cause. The signs almost invariably indicated that the break was caused by everybody trying to sell at the same time. Practically every Ohio county was manure gives best results when applied to corn. On poorer soil it may be advisable to save some manure, if possible, for the wheat or clover. On wheat, a high-analysis fertilizer is profitable, not alone because of the increased yields of wheat, but also because of its excellent residual effect on the following clover crop.

San Francisco Hot Spell Revolutionizes Custom

(By Associated Press)

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 9.—Miss San Francisco laid aside the furs she customarily wears the year around, her smart young brother made a futile search for that straw hat he bought last spring to be in style and then discarded for reasons for comfort, and with all other members of the family who could get away hurried to the beaches. The reason was that the thermometer climbed to the unusual height of 91 degrees yesterday. The weather man said it was the warmest day this year, but everybody else believed it was the warmest in a much longer period. Beaches were dotted thickly with bathing suits, parasols and gingham gowns, while those of the business world who were held in offices downtown stole off to round-the-corner soda fountains. The warm weather was general over the state.

One hundred and fifty thousand members of the American Legion are expected to attend the national convention, starting October 16, in New Orleans, La.
