GIRL HERO OF AMERICAN DOG DERBY HOPES TO WIN NEXT ONE

Above, Miss Lydia Hutchison, famous girl driver, as race followers know her, and "Smoky" Gaston, rival she saved last winter. Below, "Tud" Kent, champion, whose title both seek.

ASHTON, Idaho, Jan. 26—Lydia Hutchison led a searching party over blizzard-swept trails in the Targhee forest to hunt for "Smoky" Gaston, famous dog driver, missing with his team while on his way to the annual American dog derby here. That was last winter.

Then when Gaston, with his team, chewed up in a forest battle with wild animals, was definitely out of the trial classic she took his number in the race, and in a sensational trial battle with elements at their worst, in open competition with the crack dog drivers of America, brought it through to a spectacular finish that made him—and her—famous through the length and breadth of the land.

Out in the country where the game of life is played close to the vest, they say the women of the great out of doors always held a fellow when he's down—but look out for them when he's up and going strong, for they can compete with him in anything. And in the 1923 dog derby, which will start at this little town near Yellowstone park on Washington's birthday, Miss Hutchison will be right on Gaston's trail, out for his scalp, out for the first money from the big purse. And both of them are out after the title held by "Tud" Kent, American champion.

They are not alone in this ambition. At least a dozen of the best trailmen in America, with the fastest sled teams in the world, are cherishing the same idea, and training their dogs accordingly. For the American derby holds its place in the "Big Three," the all-Alaskan sweepstakes and the Hudson bay derby being the endurance contests of traildom, while the American course near the Yellowstone holds the speed event.

Dark horse teams are abundant. It
