

We have been not a little amused by the perusal of an article on "Animal Magnetism," an extract from which will be found in this day's paper. It would, really, seem a matter of astonishment, if the learned men of France should suffer a conjuring few impostors to take the advantage of their credulity, and, thereby, introduce to the world a new system of witchcraft. And yet, we must confess we have strong suspicions that so it will turn out. For, although the commissioners appointed to investigate this subject seem to have done it with the utmost circumspection, still, it is possible that they were deceived. If the result of the experiments implied nothing more than a change in the physical powers of the animal economy, it might appear reasonable enough to be entitled to some credit. But when we are told, that animal magnetism endows the patient with supernatural powers—that it not only enables him to see through his eyelid, but to determine the character of inscrutable diseases, and foretell events with certainty and exactness—we cannot believe it. And yet, the learned reviewers have declared it unwise and irrational to form an opinion on such subjects as these, at once; that we should "humbly and diligently inquire, but not decide."

Little as we care for these chilling admonitions, we would by no means have the subject prematurely abandoned. It has already made an impression that is either good or evil; and as the engines of the latter, always operate with the greatest power when least exposed, we should like to see it thoroughly investigated, that there shall not a shadow of doubt remain upon the mind of any one, in regard to the pretended influence of this mysterious agent, over the exalted attributes of the human soul. And whenever it shall appear to our entire satisfaction, that any agent within the control of man, is capable of endowing a mortal being with supernatural powers and the spirit of prophecy, then indeed, shall we be prepared to believe, that "death is an eternal sleep." With these remarks we must take leave of "animal magnetism," while we shall look, with anxious expectation, towards the "land of mysteries" for fresh light upon this strange subject.

We have received several anonymous communications on the subject of Education, from which we shall select one for publication in our next. In the mean time, we would observe to our correspondents, by way of a damper, that this subject is so familiar, and has been so much harped on, it requires the touch of a masterly hand, to give it that degree of interest to which it is unquestionably entitled.

From Eastern papers, just received, we learn that the King of Spain is dead.

The editor of the Statesman, under the head of "plagiarism," complains that "original articles" of the Statesman are frequently to be found in his exchange papers for which no credit is given—wonder if we are not in danger? It is natural to look to head quarters for light.

If the same spirit for painting, paving and other ornamental and commodious improvements that has prevailed this year, should continue through the ensuing season, our village will present an external appearance, in strict accordance with the neatness and gentility of its inhabitants.

There will be a temperance sermon and address delivered at the Methodist meeting house on sabbath evening next.

The latest accounts from Europe seem to encourage a hope that the fraternal war, of which unhappy Portugal has so long been the scene, will speedily come to a close.

JOHN LANIUS.—P. M.

We do not like to complain of our country friends, on any account whatever; but if they will only let us have as many eggs as will "clear" our coffee, we shall esteem it a particular favor.

The pork season is now opened, and many a "whole hog" (question) is agitated in our streets.

Can our Lyceum be re-organised? We are of opinion it would succeed better now than at any former period.

DIED.

On the 16th inst. Mary Cornelius, daughter of the Rev. William Lewis, aged six months and twenty-four days.

"You have often seen the infant of few and tender years, perhaps of months or weeks, returned to its parent earth. And often has the world wondered what can be the design of all wise providence in bringing into life so many young immortals only just to look around them and then close their eyes in death. Let our Apostle tell you. On the day of the great judgement he saw them every one; and he saw them infants still. I heaven these little cherubs shall bud and blossom forever; and they who have a fondness for infantile beauty and infantile excellence, can best appreciate the variety of tender feeling in which such an arrangement will give birth in that glad scene."
