Clubs

The seventh annual reunion of the Myers family was held Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Foessler, Madison township. Seventy-eight members were present. Dinner was served on the lawn and the day was spent with music and games. The next reunion will be held the second Sunday in August, 1920, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Foessler, Marshall county.

Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Kuehn, 504 Lincoln way W., entertained 20 guests with a dinner at Indian lake Saturday night.

The picnic held at Pottawatomie park Sunday were those of the following: The Swedish Sick society, the Sauer family reunion, the Martin Clark family reunion, the Hebrew Jewish Charity society, the Honer-Metzger family reunion, the Snyder family reunion, and the Wiltmer family reunion.

The nuptials of Fletcher DeWane Peterson and Miss Nova A. Lingard, of Laporte, were solemnized Sunday afternoon. The Rev. A. M. Ellis, of Westminster Presbyterian church, officiated, the ceremony being performed in his study.

The bride and groom were accompanied by Andrew G. Peterson, of Chicago, the brother of the groom, Miss Grace Singleton, Miss Edna Baumann and Fred Herzog, all of Laporte.

After a trip through Michigan and a visit to Chicago, the young couple will return to Laporte where they will reside. Mr. Peterson is with the Advance-Rumely Co. of that city.

PARIS, Aug. 11.—Two hundred thousand Armenian refugees in the Caucasus are on the verge of starvation and 300,000 more will be without food, it was stated here today by Walter George Smith, of Philadelphia, of the American commission for relief. The British withdrawal troops have been guarding the line of relief supplies. Mr. Smith has been acting in the near east for the commission.

PILOT BREAKS LEG WHEN PLANE FALLS

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., Aug. 11.—Matthew Bonser was seriously injured Sunday evening when a plane which he was piloting for a local manufacturing concern fell 500 feet and was wrecked. Bonser's left leg was broken. The plane was the first built by the company and had been christened before a crowd of 20,000 people. Bonser had made two successful flights in the machine and the crowd had started to disperse when he decided to make another flight. In banking while up about 500 feet the plane side-slipped and before the pilot could gain enough momentum in a nose dive to right the craft it hit the ground.

WHAT LILLIAN ASKS MADGE TO DO—YET PONDERS THE WAY

Lillian fears that her husband had furnished the information enabling the traitorous secret service operative to so nearly consummate his plan of taking from her library the important secret documents committed to her care.

The conviction flashed upon her then she said that the man over whose hand I had poured carbolio acid as he thrust it through the sawed panel of the door was a trusted operative who had just returned from South America.

Harry Underwood and Grace Draper had also but recently returned from South America. Lillian was practically certain that both were traitors to their country, and aid employees of the enemy. I had intuition enough to realize, however, that Lillian, although having no remnant of affection left for the man who had deserted her, was loath to believe that he was dastard enough to betray the secret hiding places of the service in which she was a leader, secrets which he must have learned without her knowledge by watching and spying upon her.

Another conviction forced itself into my mind, aided by the intent brooding look Lillian gave me. She wished me to try to trace this man through Harry Underwood.

When Betty had sounded the alarm of the men who were trying to enter the kitchen, Lillian was telling me something at the remembrance of which I shivered with repugnance.

"I believe Harry's liking for you was the truest feeling for all his treachery to Dicky and to me that he ever experienced in his life," she had said. "And I'm sure that it was his realization that you had nothing but indifference if not actual dislike for him that actuated his joining forces with Grace Draper."

For Her Father's Sake. Another sentence from that conversation came back to me with sickening clearness.

"When Harry is broke he drinks, and when he is drinking he's like wax in the hands of the man or woman nearest him."

That Lillian wished me to meet Harry Underwood and to use the influence for good she asserted I possess over him I was certain from her words and manner. That she wouldn't ask this distasteful, almost impossible task of me unless the sternest necessity drove her to it I was also sure.

But the necessity for thwarting Grace Draper's influence over Harry Underwood was even more nearly mine then it was Lillian's. I was sure that the anonymous clippings torturing me with alleged knowledge of my father's death had come from the hand of the beautiful girl who had repeatedly tried to injure me because of her mad unreturned infatuation for Dicky. My father's life—if he were still alive—and his good name depended upon her schemes being made of no value. Harry Underwood was the only person in her confidence.

"Katherine, dear," Lillian's voice broke in upon my wandering thoughts. "Would you mind going down to Betty and engineering luncheon? She's pretty well upset by this morning's performance, and I don't want her to get to brooding over the thing and speculating upon it. Of course, she thinks I was an ordinary attempt at burglary, but the less she thinks about it the better. And there are some things I must talk with Madge."

In Deep Perplexity. "Surely," Katherine rose with alacrity. "If you want me just jingle the bell."

I faced my problem and made my decision while they held their brief colloquy. There was but one thing for me to do. My duty to my country and to my father forbade me even considering my personal feelings. When Lillian had first broached the subject I had given her my hand in token of my acceptance of any task she wished to give me. I must not permit Lillian to think that my dislike and dread of Harry Underwood had made me recede from that position.

As the door closed upon Katherine, Lillian rose and came to my side.

"Don't think I am unappreciative of the difficulties of this thing you're going to do," she said. "But you are the only person on earth who can gain the confidence of Harry Underwood and the information I must have in order to thwart that devilish Draper article—and perhaps to save your father."

"But you must tell me just what you want to do," I said. "How am I going to manage to see him without his suspecting I have arranged the meeting?"

"That's something I've been cudgeling my alleged brain over ever since I made up my mind you'd have to do this trick," Lillian answered dejectedly. "My wits must be getting stale. I've thought of a dozen different plans, each more idiotic than the one before it."

Lato my mind there flashed a scheme. I opened my lips to tell Lillian about it, then closed again. If she dubbed the plans of her own clever, fertile brain idiotic what would she think of mine?

The Horoscope

TUESDAY, AUG. 12.

The astral influences for this day are of portentous powers, with two of the strongest malefics adversely affected by the moon. Changes should be avoided, and some activities launched or engineered seemed doomed to delay or obstruction under the Lunar opposition to Saturn. It would seem as if all operations might be thwarted by the force of encountering a stone wall. Also the health may be found to be a factor in bringing about delays, obstructions and disappointments, consequently the physical condition should be particularly looked after. All papers, writings, letters and contracts should be signed with caution. Those whose birthday it is should avoid all changes and deal carefully in all respects. They should guard their health. A child born on this day will have good abilities, yet may be obstinate and unsettled.

is a garden worth cultivating indeed! Poor Kate, I'm awfully sorry for her. I don't think she's going to have what I call a really good time in life—do you?
