

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF WOMEN

Clubs

The Ladies' Aid society of the South Methodist Episcopal church assembled in the church parlors Wednesday afternoon. Mrs. Edward Duhall gave a scripture reading and Mrs. Woodruff led the devotionals. During the business session arrangements were made for their booth at the Interstate fair. Light refreshments were served to 19 members by Mrs. V. Barnhart and Mrs. L. O. Palsen. The next regular meeting, which ordinarily would have been held Sept. 10, has been postponed until after the fair.

Mrs. Irvin Royce, Dixie rd., entertained 20 members of the Ladies' Aid society of the Maple Grove M. E. church at her country home Wednesday. The day was spent in sewing, a number of garments being made for the children. In the afternoon light refreshments were served by the hostess. The next meeting will be held Aug. 20 at the home of Mrs. Edith Reaser.

In honor of Miss Martha Mary Price, of Mansfield, O., the guest of Miss Joanna Crouse, 321 Horatio st., and Miss Frances Kenney, of Grand Rapids, Mich., the houseguest of Miss Doris Campello, 1297 Riverside dr., Miss Jeanette Kline, 607 N. Main st., entertained 12 guests at a breakfast Wednesday morning. Blue and orange morning glories festively decorated the table.

On Monday evening, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Adolphsen, 1012 W. Leland av., held a reception in honor of their son, the Rev. W. Frederick Adolphsen, and his wife, whose marriage took place on July 12, 1919. The affair also partook of the nature of a farewell since Rev. and Mrs. Adolphsen are leaving next week for Greenville, Pa.

Miss Leah Zuber, 1632 Portage av., entertained 16 guests at a rook party Wednesday evening in honor of her guest, Miss Gladys Neal, of Battle Creek, Mich.

Kitchen Economies

WAYS TO SAVE MONEY AND IMPROVE COOKING BY CAREFUL MEASURING.

A scale and correct quart and pint measures should be as much the equipment of every kitchen as a tape measure in the sewing room. Every business man checks up in his own establishment the goods he receives—why should not the housewife weigh and measure the things that are delivered to her to make sure that the tradesmen have made no mistake, and that she isn't paying for more than she receives?

In addition accurate measures are a guide to perfect cookery. You may guess ingredients without going for wrong, but you can't guess a pound by looking at it. Weigh everything you buy and everything you cook and you may be astonished

Are You Superstitious

By Imogene Burch.

Can You Explain This? A professor at the University of Michigan says that with one exception he had found an explanation for every ghost story he has ever heard. This exception, told by the late Prof. Veitch of the University of Glasgow, is an account of the incident as it happened to him:

After a hard journey, Dr. Veitch arrived at an old castle in Galway where he was to make a week end visit. Being very exhausted from his journey his hostess suggested that he sleep late in the morning.

The next morning he was dozing, it being already broad daylight, when he was surprised to see the door of his room open slowly. There entered an elderly woman dressed in a curiously antique gown and carrying a bunch of keys. The thought that ran through his mind was this—she is the housekeeper; she does not know of my presence; she is wearing the Sunday gown of her mistress some years back.

But to his amazement, the woman apparently seeing him plainly, did not retire with an apology, but went around to the foot of his bed and leaned toward him with the most devilish glance of hatred he had ever seen on the glance of a woman who was wearing the very

"Their Second Honeymoon"

WHY IT PROVED UNNECESSARY FOR MADGE TO BREAK THE NEWS TO DICKY.

There was no need, after all, for the haste with which Lillian Underwood rushed me away from her house after luncheon. She was afraid that I wouldn't reach home in time for her to telephone Dicky that she wished me to get up some historical data for some illustrations. Of course, this was but a mask for the real work she had set me to perform, but it was highly important that Dicky shouldn't guess the bizarre task which I was to undertake at Lillian's bidding.

I was to make no explanations to my husband that day, however, for when I reached home Katie greeted me with an excited:

"Oh, Meesa Graham, Meesa Graham, he telephone two, three times for you. He say you call him, up as soon as you come in."

I hurried to the telephone without removing my hat or even gloves. Dicky's voice, with more than a trace of irritation in it, answered when the operator secured the connection with his studio.

"I say, Madge, where the devil have you been? I've wasted hours and almost missed my train trying to get you."

"I went into the city to do an errand for your mother," I returned quietly, although I was consumed with curiosity at the word "train."

"Where was Dicky going? He surely didn't mean the train to Marvin."

"Must have been a lengthy errand to take you all day," Dicky retorted disagreeably. It was fortunate for my self-possession that I am used to my husband's exaggerated statements—a few minutes' delay is always hours to him—else I would have been much disturbed at the idea that Dicky had an inkling of my long conference with Lillian.

"You're Not Sure?"

"Lucky for you I got you now," my husband went on, "else you wouldn't have known where I was tonight until about midnight. I'm going to Philadelphia with a bunch of the fellows—there's a stag dinner down there tonight, and I won't be back until late tomorrow evening."

"But where could I reach you by telegram if anything happened?" I asked with all a woman's instinctive aversion to being ignorant of her husband's whereabouts for any length of time.

"Telegram!" exploded Dicky. "Well, of all the rot! I'll be gone twenty-four hours, and you want to know where you can reach me by telegram? What's the matter, think I'm lying to you?"

The gross vulgarity of the speech made me shiver mentally. But I had one effect. I would not have repeated my request for Dicky's address if my life itself had depended upon the knowledge.

He gave me no chance to answer, however, even if I had wished to do so.

"Agatha says mother is very comfortable," he went on, and his tone had an apologetic tinge, "so there's no reason in the world why I shouldn't go. So long, my dear. You're not sore, are you?"

I struggled hard to answer him pleasantly, but the hurt of his careless ignoring of my wishes was too poignant. And the little seering devil who never is far away when there's any unpleasantness between Dicky and me surely must have prompted my answer.

"I Wait Oop!"

"I don't see that my state of mind would either concern or affect you," I said frigidly.

"Oh!" Dicky gave a long-drawn whistle. "Well, if that's the way you feel about it, good night!" And he hung up the receiver with a bang.

I turned away from the telephone with my eyes filled with tears of self-pity. Woman-like, I hadn't expected the conversation to end so suddenly. In the back of my brain there had lurked a hope that Dicky would give me an opportunity to say something kinder before he left the telephone. His sudden termination of our conversation startled me as much as it hurt me.

The stairs seemed interminable as I mounted them to my room. I felt unutterably weary, shaken. A sudden impulse led me through the back hall to the rooms which Katie and Jim occupied, and to which I had heard Katie go as soon as she had given me my telephone message.

"Don't call me for dinner, Katie," I said. "Mr. Graham won't be home, and my head aches so wretchedly that I'm going to lie down. When I awaken I will get something."

I wait oop for you," Katie said resolutely, and I went back to my room.

It seemed hours, although it was in reality not so long, when I finally slept. I awakened from a troubled dream of Dicky's harsh Katie's excited voice at the door.
