Revelations of a Wife

My Heart and My Husband

BY ADELE GARRISON

WHY MADGE FEARED WHAT MRS. STOCKBRIDGE MIGHT DO.

Mr. Stockbridge moved promptly toward us at Mr. Donkers' call, but I could see that his action was tinged with reluctance. He evidently had noticed his wife's increasing restlessness and moodiness, knew, no doubt, far better than any of the rest of us what such action on her part portended. But there was no escaping Mr. Donkers, who, apparently feeling that his matrimonial liberty was in no danger from me, had adopted an elephantine playfulness of manner which kept me busy controlling my risibles.

"I am afraid, Stockbridge, you are cherishing a heretic, dangerous, though fair, perhaps I might say, dangerous because fair"—he indulged in a fatuous chuckle at his own remark, pointing it with an indication of his head toward me. "In your school, she tells me that she believes divorce should be made easier."

"Does that make her a heretic?" Mr. Stockbridge replied smiling, although I saw his eyes roving uneasily in search of his wife. "I don't care for it, but I should worry. Every new teacher Mr. Stockbridge gets seems to get it into her head that she is a subject for sympathy, and doesn't she seem to be just now?"

"You misunderstand me entirely," I said a bit impatiently to Miss Holcombe's bete noir. "I said I believed divorce law should be uniform over the country, and that more safeguards and difficulties should be thrown around marriage. There are many unhappy marriages. I absorbed my sentence of short as I realized that Milly Stockbridge had come within hearing, hoped devoutly that she had not caught the beginning. 'It is a tiresome subject, anyway,' I said lightly. 'I'm sure I didn't start it.' I achieved another kittenish grin as I looked at my bovine vis-a-vis.

What "Milly" Said.

"My dear Mrs. Graham," he began to protest, but Milly Stockbridge's high-pitched voice interrupted us.

"What's this about unhappy marriages?" she shrieked. "Whose, for instance? Surely not yours, Mr. Donkers, if we believe what you constantly tell us." There was a shrewish meaning in the glance she threw him which evidently penetrated even his epidemic, and I learned later that the late "dear departed" Mrs. Donkers had ruled her husband with the rod of absolute monarchy.

"And as, of course," I couldn't possibly be yours, Mrs. Graham," she made the very pronunciation of my name sound venomous, "why, Lentz, Glee Lentz, Mrs. C. Lentz, Mrs. E. E. Hall, Mrs. Simmons, Mr. and Mrs. Peoples, Mr. and Mrs. H. Freymuth, Mrs. Mary Norner, Oliver Cunningham, Mrs. Ruth Goeway Bunker, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Boyd, Mr. and Mrs. Schuyler Tipton and Mrs. Louise Tipton, Narcissa Foster, Mrs. Lena E. Marsh, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Greene, Mattie Green, Bess Kilmer, Mrs. Kilmer, Mrs. Carrie Stringer Hoeger, Mrs. Elizabeth G. Carder, Mrs. Arber Miller, Mrs. Albert Hall, E. K. Lindsay."

then, it must be ours. Why didn't you tell them ours is one of those wonderful unions made in heaven—she laughed an uneasy, grumpy, some sort of merriment that made me shiver. I looked around uneasily. Fortunately her voice is always shrill, and no one seemed to have noticed her manner or voice—no one save Alice Holcombe, who had been watching us. I saw her pick up Deane with a flash of her eye, and then saunter lazily toward us. Miss Dean promptly followed her example.

Mr. Donkers was too obtuse to realize the real seriousness of the situation, but he hastened to protest the only point his mentality could grasp.

To Distract Her.

"Oh, but my dear Mrs. Stockbridge, we mentioned nothing personal, meant nothing, it was a general, an academic discussion."

"I'm not your dear," she snapped inconsequently. "You may call me Mrs. Graham, that if you like, but I don't care for it, and you can't fool me like that. I know you meant my marriage. But I should worry. Every new teacher Mr. Stockbridge gets seems to get it into her head that she is a subject for sympathy, and doesn't she seem to be just now?"

"What's this about unhappy marriages?" she shrieked. "Whose, for instance? Surely not yours, Mr. Donkers, if we believe what you constantly tell us." There was a shrewish meaning in the glance she threw him which evidently penetrated even his epidemic, and I learned later that the late "dear departed" Mrs. Donkers had ruled her husband with the rod of absolute monarchy.

LENN J. OARE TALKS TO UNIVERSITY CLUB

"The proposed sales tax to be substituted for the excess profits tax and surtax on incomes is unfair and unjust," said Lenn J. Oare in an address before the University club Friday noon.

"Economists have agreed there is only one just method of taxation," continued Mr. Oare. "That is on ability to pay. The sales tax is a consumption tax pure and simple and will be paid by the man who earns $2,000 and spends all of it on necessities as much as the man who earns $5,000."

"Appropriations by the government during the year 1919 totaled over six billion dollars and over four billion for 1920. There is now a deficit of over one billion dollars. Before the war the largest appropriation by congress for any one year was between one and two billion dollars."

"Many articles are subject to a sales tax now of more than the proposed one percent and it looks to me to be an effort to throw taxes directly on the consumer without increasing the revenue derived."

APPROVE INCREASE OF BANK CAPITAL

With the approval of the comptroller of the treasury, the capital stock of the First National bank is now $600,000, an increase of $495,000 over the former capital stock of $105,000.

One hundred per cent dividend on the 1,050 shares of the former capital stock of the company was declared at a stockholders meeting Feb. 17. At this time it was also voted to sell stock to increase the capitalization to $600,000.

Sale of 3,500 shares at $125 per share was immediately made to both old stockholders and new ones. There are now over 319 people holding stock of the bank.

The stock was sold on a basis of $100 capital, $20 surplus and $5 undivided profits. This, with the 100 per cent dividend voted, made an increase in the capital of the bank of $495,000.

TO ERECT NEW MILL.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., April 9.—A modern rolling mill with a yearly capacity of 24,000 tons of steel sheets will be built in Indianapolis within the next six months, according to Niles Chapman, president and treasurer of the Chapman-Price Steel Co., who announced plans Friday for the rebuilding of the plant destroyed by fire March 17. The new factory will involve an expenditure of more than $1,000,000 Mr. Chapman said.

"Oh, of course!" I echoed, praying that the jest might not turn to a tragedy before the evening was over.
