Revelations of a Wife

My Heart and My Husband

BY ADELE GARRISON

WHAT MOTHER GRAHAM STARTED TO DO TO COMPLICATE MATTERS.

A ghost of the past! The words haunted my waking moments, and said themselves over and over in my dreams during the days following my outing with my father, the day which had ended so unpleasantly.

I think they were all the more forcibly impressed upon my brain because of the fact that from the moment my father had uttered them he had never again referred to the woman whose insolent recognition of him had so upset him upon the evening of our "celebration" dinner together. Of course, I had never even remotely approached the subject with him since, tried to avoid even the appearance of watching over him. But I couldn't help seeing that he was distracted, palpably worried.

It was the second day after our experience that my mother-in-law, who always takes a childish pleasure in being first to receive the mail and distribute it—indeed, she watches for the postman when she's able to leave her room, for fully an hour before it is time for him to arrive—called me aside with a much injured expression.

"Whatever has gotten into your father, Margaret," she demanded crossly. "Filled as I was with the memory of the upsetting incident at the cafe I felt a qualm of something very like terror at her question."

"Why! what do you mean?" I stammered. "Madge's Inspirations. 'Well, what's the matter with you?' she retorted, fixing me with an inquisitive eye. 'You're all pale and wobbly. I think the whole family's got the high strikes. Your father's going around starting at every ring of the doorbell or the telephone as if we were summons to the scaffold. He wants to answer the telephone as if he were a stammerer.'"

You'll Like Trading at Heller's

You Help as Much as We Do—

Every week there are at least a dozen South Bend homes taking on a new lease on life.

These "home-makers" simply know how easy and how profitable it is for them to turn in OLD furniture pieces for NEW.

The value of their "turned-in" furniture is applied toward the purchase of the new selections.

The turned-in pieces are overhauled and refinished and placed for sale in our Exchange Department (a business or department entirely separate from our NEW furniture) where it is bought by people who are glad and thankful to get it at the lower prices we are able to sell it at. YOU do these people a good turn as much as we do.

Do you wonder why this arrangement is so ideal?—and so popular? Phone or drop in some time—we'll tell you more about it.
