

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF WOMEN

Clubs Circles SOCIETY Suffrage Philanthropy

One of the most charming and successful of a series of dancing parties given by the Jo Do club was the spring festival held at the Oliver hotel Tuesday evening which was enjoyed by more than 200 of the younger set of South Bend society. The rotary room, Turkish room and the mezzanine floor was a scene of merriment. The music for the program of 12 dances was furnished by Stiemrich's orchestra, of Elkhart.

The guests of honor included Mr. and Mrs. A. Freeman, Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Fredericks, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Siskman, Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Himes, Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Jann, W. A. Wood and H. Gall Jann. The committee in charge of the affair was composed of Miss Bodinard, chairman; Mrs. George Manders, Miss Esther Vander Karr, Enid Krussell and Miss Viola Cooper.

The weekly meeting of the Anten W. R. C. was held Tuesday evening at the old court house with 24 members in attendance. It being Gen. Grant's anniversary, Rudolph Donmoyer, a member of the Anten W. R. C., gave a short story of his life. The March and April birthday party which was to have been held May 5 has been postponed indefinitely. The members will attend the Bob Jones meeting in a body next Monday night when all the parties as usual will be present. There will be a picnic next Tuesday afternoon.

The Freshmen's Girls' Reserve entertained with a hard time party Tuesday afternoon at the Y. W. C. A. Games were played from 4 until 5:30 o'clock when a pot luck supper was served to 26 members, after which dancing was enjoyed until 7 o'clock. Much amusement was afforded by the original costumes worn by the girls who were divided into two classes, dressing as boys and girls. The next regular meeting will be held May 4 when summaries will be given of the subjects of the meetings of the past three months.

Invitations have been issued by Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Burr August, 237 Colorado av., Highland Park, Detroit, Mich., for the marriage of their daughter, Vera Amy, and Alfred Clinton Roy Durant, son of Mr. and Mrs. Philip E. Bon Durant, 214 W. Navarre st. The wedding will take place at 8:30 o'clock Tuesday evening, May 11.

The nature study department of the Progress club held its regular meeting in the club rooms Tuesday afternoon. Following the usual business session C. J. Morrison, of Mt. Pleasant, Mich., gave a talk on "Bee Culture," and Mrs. C. A. Miller read a poem, "Solomon and the Bees." The last meeting of year will be held in the club rooms May 11.

Mrs. Viola Barnhart was hostess to twelve of the Lady Macabees at her home, 2525 S. Michigan st., Tuesday afternoon. Arrangements were made for Memorial day during the business session which was followed by a social hour. Refreshments were served.

Mr. and Mrs. Ben Frank entertained with an informal dinner party in the dining room of the Oliver hotel Monday evening. Covers were laid for twelve at a table attractively centered with spring flowers. The guests included Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Hering, Mrs. B. Mayer, Mrs. Abe Frank, W. A. Wood and J. W. Brewer.

Announcement has been made of the engagement of Miss Dorothy Knott, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. Knott, of New Madrid, Mo., to Harold M. Shafer, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Shafer, 293 S. Williams st., vice president of the Cyrus C. Shafer Lumber Co., of this city. The wedding will take place in June.

Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Newman, 1115 Lincoln st., announce the marriage of their daughter, Pearl Mae, to Herbert P. Clewell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Clewell of Bethlehem, Pa. The wedding took place Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the St. Paul M. E. church, Rev. James L. Gardner officiating. The bride wore a traveling suit of navy tricotine with hat to match and a corsage of bride's roses. Mr. and Mrs. Clewell left immediately for Chicago. Since their return to this city they are home at the Robertson hotel. On Monday evening Mr. and Mrs. Newman entertained with a family dinner at their home honoring Mr. and Mrs. Clewell.

The Tabitha girls of the Zion Evangelical church entertained with a miscellaneous shower at the parish school Monday evening as a compliment to Miss Edith Barth whose marriage will take place soon. The evening was devoted to social entertainment, games and the principal diversion. Refreshments were served to 35 guests by the hostess. There will be a regular meeting of the circle held at the school in two weeks.

Mrs. Nora Kemmerly, 701 N. Michigan st., entertained with a 6 o'clock dinner at her home Monday evening as a courtesy to her house guests, Mrs. Walter Ernberger and her daughter, Lucile, of Colorado Springs, Colo. Covers were laid for 10 guests.

Twenty-four relatives and friends surprised Mrs. Richard Dugdale, 209 E. Navarre st., on Saturday evening, the occasion being her birthday anniversary. At contests which were diversions of the evening favors were won by Mrs. Thomas Carson, Mrs. Nellie Stidlin, Steve Clark and Richard Dugdale.

The Loyal American Drill team will entertain with a dancing party at Beyer hall Thursday evening.

STATE GEOLOGIST PLANS TO RELIEVE PAPER SHORTAGE

INDIANAPOLIS, April 27.—Rich deposits in many Indiana counties of kaolin, a mineral, may be the means by which the print paper shortage can be partially relieved, according to Dr. W. N. Logan, state geologist, who has written a book concerning the mineral and its uses. In addition to its use for the manufacture of print paper, kaolin contains properties for the manufacture of pottery, alum, pigments, poison gas, insecticides and filters. It is found in Orange, Lawrence, Monroe, Martin, Owen and Greene counties, the report states.

Revelations of a Wife

My Heart and My Husband

BY ADELE GARRISON

WHAT KENNETH STOCKBRIDGE DID TO CONTROL HIS WIFE.

Milly Stockbridge's eyes were glittering with a light that betrayed the frailty of the thread upon which her sanity hangs, while her slender figure was fairly shaking with the violence of the emotion consuming her. There was no mistaking the passion of jealousy that was swaying her. It was in every line of the malevolent face she turned toward our table.

"I mean you!" she called rancorously. "You over there with your baby face."

Kenneth Stockbridge's sneaky hand darted out, seized his wife's arm in a grip that must have hurt her, at the same time saying something to her in a low, controlled voice. We couldn't catch the words, but there was something about the passionless, measured tones that made me shiver. It was as if I had seen the gentlest, kindest of house dogs suddenly turn with bared fangs upon a tormentor.

Her father bent forward, anxiously scanning his wife's face. I heard him say something of which the only word I could distinguish was "check" uttered with a questioning intonation, and I conjectured that the older man wished to leave the cafe with his family at once.

But Kenneth Stockbridge shook his head, his eyes, grim, compelling upon his wife's face. Another minute, and she had lifted a cowed face to his, while her stiff, white lips muttered something that was evidently a promise to control herself. As she did so he released his grip upon her arm, and sank back into his former attitude of weary despondency.

"By Jove!" Dicky exclaimed under his breath. "That's the prettiest little exhibition of animal taming I ever saw. Bet a fiver he punishes the everlasting daylight out of her when she gets her home. Any takers?"

He glanced around our table with a merry smile, and I realized with a throb of relief that he had not grasped the real significance of Milly Stockbridge's outburst. I didn't see how he could have helped doing so, for her eyes had been fixed directly upon me. In fact, I had been compelled to avert all the self-control I possessed to keep from visibly quailing at the hatred in the glance my principal's wife shot at me.

Bess Dean Explains.

"You are mistaken, Mr. Graham," Alice Holcomb spoke hurriedly, eagerly. "Mr. Stockbridge is gentleness itself to his wife. It is only when she outrageously offends that he ever exerts his authority. You see I speak as one having knowledge," she added with a deprecating little smile, "for I have been a friend to both of them since childhood."

"They are lucky," Dicky returned gallantly, but I noticed that his eyes had a speculative gleam as they rested on my friend and knew that his brain was busy with conjectures concerning her, and her relation to the Stockbridges. The next moment he turned to Bess Dean.

"I infer that you are the cause of our fair neighbor's little exhibition," he said, smiling, and a thrill of surprise ran through me. Dicky had seen nothing of the real situation, had jumped to the conclusion that Miss Dean was the object of Mrs. Stockbridge's jealousy.

Why? I wondered. I had no opportunity just then to answer my own question, for Dicky was still speaking.

"Aren't you ashamed of yourself to cause such ructions?" he demanded.

I held my breath for Miss Dean's answer. It came promptly, as I might have expected, with laughing flippancy.

"My fatal beauty," she said, lowering her eyelids for a moment. "I strongly suspected that she knew how effective were my eyelashes—I really can't help it."

Madge, I piqued.

Her answer, her ready acceptance of Dicky's theory, gave me much food for thought during the rest of our stay at the cafe, which held no other interest of the ordinary, for Milly Stockbridge, who with her, left shortly before we did, preserved the same frozen quietude into which her husband's words had plunged her. But I pondered deeply over Bess Dean, wondering whether she really believed herself to be the object of Milly Stockbridge's jealousy, or was trying to shield me from Dicky's suspicions.

And I think any woman will understand that I experienced a distinct feeling of pique that Dicky should have thought Bess Dean the only woman attractive enough to arouse Milly Stockbridge's jealousy.

Winifred Black Writes About:

An Old Maid Genius

Oh, how I love my teacher!

"And how I wish my teacher loved me!"

That's what I keep thinking all the time, when I read a letter that lies on my desk. It's from Teacher, and she's an old maid, she says, and very odd and peculiar, and nobody likes her very well—but the children.

And she doesn't care much for anybody—but the children. Old people are so different, young people are so selfish, and middle-aged people are such egotists, she says.

But children—ah children! They're like clear pools of clear water in the brown forest, or like fresh running streams, so gay, so trusting, so loyal, so eager and so loving.

When she is in the schoolroom, she doesn't feel like an old maid at all, she says.

She doesn't feel like anything but just a happy, human being, with a lot of loving little friends around her. And she loves to tell them things. Nice, interesting things, about muskrats and how they live, and little owls with big eyes that don't see much, and foxes with three-cornered faces and bushy tails.

Things about the far countries, she loves to tell them—stories of the old wars, when ancient kings stretched out their hands and tried to rule the earth.

Overflowing With Fascination. She knows ballads that the little pages used to sing, the footpages who ran along by the stirrup of the king's horse, and held his feet at night and sang him to sleep with songs of home and love and peace.

"Oh, Richard, oh, my king!"—yes, that she knows, too, and when she tells the story of the little footpage who wandered all over Europe and found at last his king, hidden in a dark dungeon, and sang under his windows, the old song, and found a way to let him out, she sings the old song herself—"Oh, Richard, Oh, my King!" and some of the children cry a little and some laugh and some tremble with the strange joy to hear it.

The legends of the Norsemen, she knows, too—the old Sagas, all about ships and wild seas, and great battles and tall blond women with blue eyes, as cold as the northern sea. And the little crooning songs of Ireland, she knows, too—"My dark Rosaline, my own Rosaline."

"For there was lightning in my blood, red lightning, in my blood," "My dark Rosaline."

That, too, she can sing, and does, when she tells the old tales of ancient times, and the children listen and are very happy, and she is happy, too, and she wonders if there is something queer about her to be so contented in the schoolroom, and so restless and lonely outside.

Queer?—yes, I suppose she is queer, this woman, with the heart of a child and soul of a poet. I wish we had a few more like her in our schools today.

She lives, not in the sordid, mean, little rivalries of her school, but in the great thoughts of the great past; she walks with poets and with prophets. Her heart sings with the song of Miriam, and her heart beats to the tune of old cadences long since forgotten by ordinary mortals.

An Inspired Art. She takes the bare bones of history, and clothes them in purple and fine linen, and in cloth of gold and silver, and every one of the children who is lucky enough to go to school to her will know not only when wars were fought—but why, and how, and what human hearts were crushed to make a glittering victory.

Teaching is an inspired art, and this woman has it. Congratulations, children, you who are fortunate enough to have her take you by the hand and show you the gorgeous pageantry of the ages! Listen to her well, for your whole lives will be different because of "an old maid school teacher," who really loves to teach.

SCHOOL ATTENDANCE IS POOR IN CITIES

INDIANAPOLIS, April 27.—The percentage of pupils attending high schools for the year of 1918-1919 was much lower in the larger cities of the state, than in the smaller towns, according to a report made public by U. S. Hines, state superintendent of public instruction. Tempting opportunities for high wages in industries is said to be responsible for the slump in attendance of the larger cities.

NEW YORK.—The romance of John Toole, 15 years old, and Mrs. Helen Shea O'Toole, 17 years old, was to end today. They were to be denied even the grown up solace of a regular divorce, their parents insisting on annulment.
