HYDROPHOBIA IN CLAY CO.

Case Discovered Just North of Brazil That Developed From Bite of Dog Occurring Last August.

13 YEAR OLD BOY A VICTIM

Dr. Pell of Carbon came to this city this afternoon and reported to Dr. Williams, county health officer, a case of hydrophobia which he discovered in the family of Steven West at Fairview, just north of this city. The patient is Raney, the 13-year old son of Mr. West. The hydrophobia, but it was not until last night that Dr. Pell learned the full history of the case.

The symptoms of the boy mystified the doctor, but when Mr. West told him that on the 30th day of last August the boy was bitten by a dog that had been acting queerly he felt reasonably certain that he was treating his first case of hydrophobia. The patient is exhibiting such marked symptoms as extreme nervousness, a nervous shrinking from the touch, insomnia, semi-unconsciousness, inability to stand upright with the eyes closed, etc.

All of these are well defined symptoms. A consultation of physicians of this city and county is called for tomorrow to investigate the case thoroughly. It is hoped that the case will be that of a sympathetic nature, as the boy has been reading every word of the hydrophobia scare at Terre Haute, and has been greatly impressed by the situation there.

However, Dr. Pell fears that he has made no mistake in this matter. —Brazil Times.

TRUSTEE STONER ENTERTAINS

Are teachers enthusiastic? Well, had you been at the interurban station Saturday afternoon and had seen the crowd that took the 5:42 car for the west, you would have decided that they are not always sad and serious. This was all caused by Mr. Sim Stoner, trustee of Greencastle Township, inviting his teachers and their families and the County Superintendent and his wife to take six o'clock dinner with him at his country home.

"All aboard," shouted the conductor and we were on our way. Miss Newman had to pay a dime, (she took up too much room,) but the remainder of us got off with a fare of five cents each. Soon the motorman applied the brakes, ah, too soon! and we alighted in the vanished twilight to find Christie Stoner there with his trusted mule team and a hay wagon to drive us across the fields and pastures to his father's palatial mansion. Fred Thomas was the first to climb the ladder and when he was safely mounted on his high perch he shouted, "Let's go," but "No, No, No!" came in a protest "I am going too," came from his wife on the ground.

That hay ride! It made the teachers poetical. Miss Hodshire looked for the new moon and when she saw the lights on the sky from Greencastle she turned to get its full gaze over her right shoulder, and then I smiled, she had lost her bearings. Mr. Sinclair began to philosophize, (silently of course) on the powers of James Watt's steam engine as he saw the east bound flyer on the Vandallia crossing the open wild below us with its streamers of dazzling light radiating from every open window. Just then he turned toward the west and there was the electric car with its "no pull and no push" racing with time toward the city and Franklin and his chained lightning crossed his mind. This was only for a moment however, it was gone! Then he glanced toward a Monon switch engine a few hundred yards away and he sighed, "There are a few things in this active world that do not go so very swift yet."

Just now T. C. Vaughn began to meditate also, but when Mr. Stoner's magnificent home showed a beacon light from every spacious window he sniffed the frosty air for the savory odor of the National Bird and then he murmured, "I wish the mules could go a little faster just once more at least." Nor should I fail to mention the County Superintendent here. He sat on the rear of the hay wagon and complained of weird sensation which he called a hungry headache and his wife in her ecstasy found Miss Lovett's overshoe which she did not know she had lost. Mrs. Sinclair and Mrs. Vaughn had a little private conversation about the beauties of county life and had just begun to talk about the children and what they had planned for Christmas when we heard, "Why, good evening folks, How-do-you-do. Get right out, Otho, don't let the mules start while the ladies are dismounting, they might fall and get hurt, they might, so they might," and we all knew it was the voice of the host himself, and was he ever more happy? Yes, just once, (when he was safely planted at the dinner table.) "You are all here, are you, come right in, Fred I'll carry the baby," but Fred stammered, "We left her at home to keep company for her aunt."

When wraps were laid aside Miss Tompkins discovered her second bouquet was gone, and Mr. Vaughn the good Samaritan that he is, came to her rescue and she smiled as she fastened a rose at its accustomed place for the third time since leaving home an hour before.

Then there were Mr. Stoner's assistants, Mr. Albert Houck and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Christie Stoner and Mrs. Ed. Houck and Mrs. John Houck (aunts of the hostess), also to help give us a royal welcome. Next we entered the dining room. Well, it took my appetite, there was too much. I wished for more time, just say a month to do it justice. And the fun hunting our place cards, Miss Buster knew hers at once when she found Mrs. Jim Crow lipping her a-b-c's, (from the Crow school). Miss Newman found a new-man, the hero from the gridiron with his hair well kept, his favorite cigarette with its rings of soothing smoke curling above his head and his peg top trousers rolled half way to his knees showing his fancy hose. Mr. Sinclair would not leave the end of the table when he found a fox scampering across an open ridge, (Foxridge). The Smithy at the set of sun was claimed by Miss Smithson and Miss Lovett took Cupid with his man darts in remembrance of her name, (Love.) Supt. Thomas found a corner and he felt honored over his late debut into the musical world. Mr. Stoner spied a trusty (ee) wearing the stripes and he smiled, he knew he would soon be out of prison (office). But I cannot tell you all, my memory fails me.

That dinner! six courses but really it was ten, and such eating! An hour and the telephone rang. I thought it was a signal to stop, but it was a call for Miss— and when she said we will be there on the 11:15, I took courage and began to eat again. Oyster, turkey, cranberries, sherbert, fruits in season and out of season, ice cream, cake, etc., etc., and then good cistern water, (it rained down there last week). Well, after another hour they had to open both double doors for us to make our exit to the front parlor.

Now what! Music? No, all too sluggish. Singing? No, all too full. Laughter? No, a faint sight of torture. We just sat and rested a while and then rested some more.

Finally Mr. Sinclair arose, next he moved. I knew he was safe, then he renewed his courage and walked. I knew what was coming. He pushed something in front of the host and in a few well chosen words he made the presentation speech giving a beautiful Morris chair to Mr. Stoner.

After a few moments of suspense the trustee responded grandly eloquently and then sat back in the soft cushions. Ah that smile! It was good to look upon. I knew he was pleased.

Now for an hour of music and games, ere eleven o'clock came, and it did come too soon. "Blessed be the tie that binds" was sung and good-byes were said, then the wagon was reloaded with its human freight. The driver's whip rang out its keen snap on the still night air and we were on our way home, yet the cheerful lights still shown and flashed us a warm good night and a welcome back again.

Was the trolley on time? Just fifty minutes late. But weren't we all happy? About so. Well no, not all, Miss— and Miss— knew some one at the station were waiting for a belated car.

"See the reflection on the western sky," someone shouted in ecstasy. "Now see the great headlight, I could almost embrace it," smiled Miss—. "All aboard, ding, ding. The next stop will be made at the depot." Presently the brakes were applied and the conductor shouted, "The first class in Astronomy will please arise, and then pass," and when I looked at my watch it was Sunday morning.

One who was there.

INTERURBAN WINS CASE

Indiana Railway Commission Decides That Steam Roads Must Exchange With Traction Lines.

BIG FOUR LOSES CONTENTION

A decision rendered by the Indiana Railroad Commission Saturday makes it incumbent upon a steam road to enter into an interchange of carload traffic with an interurban company, regardless of whether two or more steam roads have entered into an agreement not to exchange their car traffic.

The decision was given by Union B. Hunt, chairman of the commission and involved the litigation between the Winona Interurban Railway Company and the Big Four Railroad Company, wherein the former sought to compel the latter to deliver cars to its lines in Warsaw, where there is a physical connection between the two roads.

According to the evidence introduced at the hearing some time ago, the Big Four had entered into an agreement with the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad, whereby it would not deliver any cars to the interurban railway at Warsaw. It was upon this refusal that the petitioners took the matter before the railroad commission for an adjudication.

Mr. Hunt, in rendering his decision, declares that the interchange of traffic, such as is involved in the petition, affords a larger opportunity for the shipping public and it "would bring steam and interurban roads into rightful competition."

The assertion of the officials of the Big Four that the interchange of traffic with the interurban road would have a tendency to bring their equipment under the control of the interurbans and bring their rolling stock into use for interurban business, is met by Mr. Hunt by the assertion that "such abuse of equipment can be prevented by the commission."

This was Union B. Hunt's last decision as chairman of the Indiana Railway Commission, as his resignation, which was tendered some time ago, took effect on Saturday.

DO NOT WANT WORLD'S FAIR

Indianapolis Commercial Declares The City is Not Ready for Such an Undertaking.

There is not a single substantial reason why an "international" exposition should be projected in Indianapolis. We are growing in population quite rapidly enough; we are prospering on a comparatively safe basis; we are in a fair to middling condition of good physical and mental health. We have no desire to change to a worse condition and it is not likely that we can attain a better situation by the artificial means advanced by borrowers or promoters. There is not a case on record to prove that expositions, such as the genial J. St. Clair advocates, have been of benefit morally, physically or financially to the communities in which they have been held. It is not likely that Indianapolis would fare any better than is true of Chicago, Buffalo, Portland or the others. We should drop the scheme as a hot poker that is not safe to be handled. Indianapolis does not need an exposition—it does not want an exposition.—Indianapolis Commercial.

How One Doctor Successfully Treats Pneumonia.

"In treating pneumonia," says Dr. W. J. Smith, of Sanders, Ala., "the only remedy I use for the lungs is Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. While of course, I would treat other symptoms with many different medicines, I have used this remedy many times in my medical practice and have yet failed to find a case where it has not controlled the trouble. I have used it myself, as has also my wife for coughs and colds repeatedly, and I most willingly and cheerfully recommend it as superior to any other cough remedy to my knowledge."
