STATE LEGIONNAIRES
MOBILIZE IN ONE HOUR*Surprise Orders by Telephone Test
Resources of New Hampshire
Legion for Emergencies

The entire resources of the 80 posts of the American Legion in New Hampshire were placed on an emergency basis in one hour recently during a surprise mobilization test, the purpose of which was to determine how quickly mobilization could be accomplished in the event of an actual emergency.

Plans Were Kept Secret

To preserve the surprise element, in order that the experiment might be a real test, plans for the mobilization were kept secret from all Legionnaires except the State Commander and Vice Commander.

Mobilization began with two telephone conference calls, set up between the office of the state commander of the American Legion and his eight district commanders. The first call included the district commanders at Keene, Manchester, Nashua and Rochester. The second call, two minutes later, went to the district commanders at Henniker, Sunapee, Wolfeboro and Groveton.

Gets Reports Within an Hour

Following these conference calls, each district commander called the post commanders in his district, and they in turn summoned the Legion members by means of fire signals and sirens.

Within an hour after the mobilization calls started, reports were in the state commander's headquarters on the number of men and the material and supplies available for emergency work. This included doctors, nurses, horses, ambulances, medical supplies, clothing, food, tents, boats, etc., all ready to be sent to the supposed point of danger.
