APPLICATIONS INCREASE

The number of job insurance benefit applications filed in Indiana has passed the 300,000 mark, it was announced today.

Since job insurance became effective in Indiana 16 months ago, some 267,000 individuals have filed claims, and of that number, 33,000 have filed a second claim. In the Goshen district, 290 of the 2,880 claims filed to date have been repeaters. The number of workers in insured employment has been around 660,000 in the state and 7,900 in this district, which covers central and southern Elkhart county and Lagrange and Kosciusko counties.

Since the first of the year an increasing portion of the new claims has been entered by persons who had filed applications in an earlier period of total or partial unemployment, John Stemen, Goshen job insurance manager, pointed out. In June, 8,500 of the 13,660 applications filed in the state and 104 of 138 filed in this district were repeaters.

Benefits paid since April, 1938, have exceeded $168,000.00 in this district and $23,000,000 in the state, he added.

MOLTING IS NORMAL WITH RANGE PULETS

Poultry raisers have no occasion to become alarmed if their partly grown pullets appear to be molting or losing feathers while on growing range, say Purdue poultry experts. Growing birds normally lose their chick feathers before reaching maturity. These small feathers are lost before the mature plumage is developed. If several hundred pullets are ranging together, there may be a good many feathers in and around the brooder houses and shelters at this time of year.

Each year the poultry department of Purdue University receives a large number of inquiries concerning this type of molt. Wm. Kohlmeyer, Purdue University extension poultryman explains that this summer molt of growing birds is simply a normal part of the birds' growth and development.

Many poultry raisers have had experience with laying flocks that have ceased laying and gone into a molt during the fall and winter.

Prof. Sigurd Johansen of New Mexico State College was puzzled when he saw steam rising from the sprinkler on his lawn. An investigation showed that steam from a boiler had backed into his cold water pipes.

Hold that temper! The value of keeping calm at all times, especially while driving an automobile is important.

Many times during your driving experience, you probably have felt like tearing apart the driver ahead of you because of some stupid act of his; but in the end, what did you gain?

Be alert at all times and give some of these stupid drivers an opportunity to get out of your way. Do not let them cause you any embarrassment or involve you in an accident.

Keep your car under control at all times—travel the safe speed—and above all, "Leave your goat" at home.
