THE FOUR SHIPS

On the last days of August, four great European ships were resting peacefully at their docks in the harbor of New York. In fact these were four of the World's most renowned ships. One was the Prinz Eugen of Germany; one the Roma of Italy; one the Normandie of France; one the Acquitania of England. Your correspondent saw them all, as our vehicle passed by through less than half a dozen city blocks.

There was nothing in the appearance of these great monsters of the sea to indicate that they represented the titanic struggle of Germany and Italy with France and England. Nevertheless the United States Government, which boasts that it is the greatest neutral government in the world was at the moment searching these foreign vessels to discover whether they were armed so that they might become sea-raiders on enemy merchantmen and involve our own nation in damages through attacks upon other ships in the outer ocean.

That seemed strange, indeed. But no stranger than to picture the peaceful cities of London, Paris, Berlin and Rome, in military array, amid all the monstrous "patriotic echoes" that unless checked must lead on to the slaughter of millions of innocent citizens of those four European countries.

We might philosophize at length. But why waste words. Sherman said it: "War is hell."

So bon voyage to the four great ships that laid so peacefully in the harbor a few days ago.
