Farm Oddities

By Sam Guard

Radio Commentator on The Farmer's Forum

THIS week's most interesting Farm Oddity is a hen that lays a streamlined egg. Out in Le Mars, Iowa, Mrs. Oscar Weidenfeller has reported that one of her white leghorn hens has been laying, with exceptional regularity, eggs that are long, slender and pointed at both ends. In this "streamlined" age, her flock should go far in producing breakfast for passengers on the transatlantic Clippers.

Sam Guard

Here's a Farm Oddity that packs a good laugh. Ote Robinson, who lives near Augusta, Kansas, was building a new electric fence to keep his stock at home. Robinson, who is not mechanically inclined, had a book of instructions which told him just how to do the job. He had followed instructions to the letter up to page four. Then he was called away. When he returned he found that a calf had chewed up the instructions. Work on the fence stopped until Ote could obtain another booklet.
