NEW PARIS, 54-52

The Syracuse high school basketball team defeated the New Paris five, at New Paris, last Friday night 54-52. A long shot in the final seconds by John Kroh, Syracuse center, gave the Yellowjackets an overtime win, after being behind for the game.

New Paris started fast and completely outclassed Syracuse in the early periods by hitting the basket from all over the floor. However, the Yellowjackets refused to say die and in a brilliant rally succeeded in tying the score at the end of the regular playing time and then went on to win on Kroh's shot in the extra session.

New Paris went to the front, 16 to 9 at the quarter and at the half led the floor with a 10-point lead, 30 to 20. Syracuse came back after the intermission and cut New Paris' lead to 35-32 at the end of the third quarter.

The last quarter was a see-saw battle with neither team gaining much advantage over the other, although Syracuse out-scored the Cubs in the last quarter. The scheduled time ended with a 47-47 deadlock. In the overtime the score was tied at 49-49, after a field goal by each team. A free throw by Barnhart put the Yellowjackets in the lead by one point. A field goal by Korenstra put the Cubs in the lead. But Bushong came through with a tip in and the Yellowjackets were again in the lead. Hoover converted on a free throw for New Paris to put the game in a 52-52 deadlock. With seconds to go Kroh converted on his ninth field goal to put the game on ice for the Yellowjackets.

The Syracuse Reserves won the preliminary game 24-13. Brown with 8 points led the Yellowjackets, Burkholder and Miller with 4 each led the Cubs.

B. & O. Railroad Plays Part In History

John Quincy Adams was president of the United States when America's first railroad, the Baltimore and Ohio, began the construction of its line from the Atlantic Seaboard westward to the Ohio River. The date was Independence Day of 1828 and President Adams was invited to preside at the great celebration that was held that day in Baltimore. But he declined. He commented that the railroad wouldn't amount to much and he chose instead to attend the inaugural ceremonies of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal. They were being held the same day in Washington.

In March of 1833, however, when Adams had given way to Andrew Jackson as president, he tried out the new-fangled conveyance. He was the first U. S. president to do so. Every president since has traveled on the trains of the B. & O. and eight of them, including Franklin D. Roosevelt, made their inaugural journeys on that line.

Jackson's first rail trip took place on June 6, 1833, between Elliott's Mills, Md., and Baltimore, over the first thirteen miles of the B. & O. line to be put into operation. Two years later, Jackson adjourned a cabinet meeting in order to watch the first B. & O. train enter Washington over its new line.

The first president to use a B. & O. train enroute to his inauguration ceremony was William Henry Harrison. He took the oath in 1841. The B. & O. had a special coach fitted out for that part of his inaugural trip between Frederick, Md., and Washington, D. C.

Other presidents who used the B. & O. to Washington to assume office were: James K. Polk, inaugurated in 1845; Zachary Taylor, inaugurated in 1849; Millard Fillmore, who was inaugurated as vice president in 1849, and who assumed the presidency upon death of Taylor in 1850; Franklin Pierce, inaugurated in 1853; James Buchanan, inaugurated in 1857; Abraham Lincoln, inaugurated in 1861, and Franklin D. Roosevelt, inaugurated for the first time in 1933.

Probably the most arduous inaugural journey was made by Zachary Taylor—and only the tail end of it was made by railroad. Taylor started well in advance of the inaugural date, leaving his sugar plantation in Baton Rouge on January 24, 1849. His party sailed up the Mississippi on a flat-bottomed riverboat, turning into the Ohio river at Cairo.

They disembarked from the boat at Wheeling, W. Va., and boarded a stagecoach for Uniontown, Pa. The next morning they took off on horseback for Cumberland, Md., the end of the line for the B. & O. in those days (the railroad did not open service to Wheeling on the Ohio River until 1853.) A special B. & O. train then carried Taylor and his suite from Cumberland to the Relay House, Md. (where the B. & O.'s old main line joined the Washington Branch, as it was called in those days.)

those days.)

Out of Relay to Washington, another special B. & O. train of 19 coaches drawn by three locomotives, carried Taylor and an inaugural party that by now had grown to exceed 1,000 persons.

Of all the presidents who used the B. & O. and the railroads in general, Franklin D. Roosevelt piled up the greatest mileage, railroad men agree. In one trip alone, he covered 8,754 miles and 23 states.

Incidentally, William Jennings Bryan—who tried many times but never succeeded in winning the presidency—was another great railroad traveler. In one campaign year—1896—he traveled 18,831 miles. On that trip, he covered 27 states and delivered 592 speeches in 447 different cities and towns. The radio has since put an end to much of the campaign travel that was necessary in those days.

Several of the many presidents who traveled on the B. & O. are remembered for their peculiar preferences and idiosyncracies. President "Teddy" Roosevelt liked to ride the locomotive—once he actually drove the B. & O.'s pioneer locomotive, the "Atlantic," built in 1832. It was on exhibition at the time. His comment on the trip: "Bully." Mrs. Alice Longworth, his daughter, also once rode on a B. & O. engine, wearing white kid gloves.

Calvin Coolidge preferred a drawing room on a regular Pullman to a special car, and sometimes climbed into an upper berth for a nap. Grover Cleveland, a prodigious eater, kept his favorite B. & O. chef, Joseph Brown, busy preparing oysters and fish, wild duck and pheasant. He made the B. & O.'s hotel at Deer Park, in western Maryland, his "Summer Whitehouse," and spent a 15-day honeymoon there.

Chester A. Arthur liked the corn bread on the B. & O. diners, and Rutherford B. Hayes expressed a preference for the B. & O. baked apples—with the skins left on, and plenty of cream. William McKinley liked B. & O.'s prepared terrapin, and Herbert Hoover's favorite was cherry pie.

Carol Miller and Margaret Marsh entertained the Christian Endeavor of the Lakeside E.U.B. church Monday evening in the Miller home. During the business meeting it was decided to have a Valentine party at the church on Monday evening, Feb. 7. Games were a feature of the evening's entertainment. Refreshments were served with a birthday cake in honor of Shirley Reed. She was also presented a gift. Fifteen members were present.

Wayne; Thomas B. McDonald, Commissioner, Knox; Samuel C. Hadden, Chairman, Indianapolis; and Albert J. Wedeking, Commissioner, Dale.

Mr. Hadden stated that the Commission was in agreement on three major goals to be accomplished—widening of narrow bridges and resurfacing of principal lines of travel; sufficient new construction to use up federal aid funds allotted to Indiana; and rigid enforcement of truck laws as related to weight limits.
