HUDSON MOTOR CAR
WIDELY ADVERTISED

The Hudson Motor Car company's advertising program, which features the local delivered price of the new Hudson and also gives an indication of the local delivery situation, has been so well received by the public that the company is continuing the program in February with the largest newspaper campaign to date on the "stepdown" models, H. D. Harkless, local Hudson dealer says.

The campaign was started nationally in January to get across the facts for Hudson's broadened sales policies, which among other things call for dealers ordering fifty percent of Super Six and Super eight models with no extras and so offering the cars to the public.

"The new campaign, in addition to publicizing Hudson's broadened sales policies," Mr. Harkless said, "has served to clear the public's thinking on Hudson's current delivery situation. With conflicting reports circulating on how long it takes to get delivery of a car, the company felt that in areas where dealers are able to supply certain models immediately that the public should be informed. In other areas, where delivery on all models requires waiting periods, the ads make no promises except that early delivery is possible on some models."

"In both cases, once the customer comes to the showroom the dealer can give him specific information on local availability of each individual model and take the customer's order for early delivery of the model desired."

In addition, the ads list the following points of policy:

1. Immediate or early delivery of some models, depending on the area.
2. With only such accessories as you order.
3. Cash or time payments.
4. With or without trade-in.
5. Good allowance if you have a trade-in.

Twenty-five hundred newspapers with a combined circulation of 34,000,000 are being used to carry this advertising as part of Hudson's Local Area Advertising program.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Vail, of Lake Trail Kennels shipped a registered German Shepherd male pup to Mr. and Mrs. Paul Briggs, Shipshewana, Pa., Monday. Mr. and Mrs. Vail have purchased a beautiful registered Silver Gray German Shepherd female, 4-month-old from Grafmar Kennels, Wrentham, Mass.

What Cheer?

Digger O'Dell, the friendly undertaker, is one caller whose visits never cheer a convalescent. Here the macabre character of WLW-NBC's "Life of Riley" program (Friday nights, 10 p. m., EST) calls on William Bendix (foreground), who stars in the title role.

Go north. Go south. Go east. Go west. You'll find my goods Are best by test.

What keeps people coming back to our store again and again is the unlimited stock of quality electrical appliances we have on hand. Of course our reasonable prices and friendly service may have something to do with it too.

Legislative
News Letter

Indianapolis, Feb. 21. — The Democrat-dominated House of Representatives went to work this week on the biggest proposed budget in Indiana history—the budget that virtually knocked out all Democratic promises of tax relief.

Meanwhile, as the state legislature passed the half-way mark of its 61-day session without passing a single major piece of legislation, Democrats moved to plunge the state into debt to pay the soldiers' bonus. Rep. Joseph Klein of Gary, offered a proposed constitutional amendment, understood to have party approval, which would authorize the state to float $150 million worth of bonds.

Indiana now is prohibited by its constitution from going into debt. The Klein amendment, however, would let the bars down for the first time, would stall the necessity for raising bonus cash in this legislature and would turn the bonus question back to the voters once again in another referendum. The amendment would have to pass both this and the next session of the General Assembly and a referendum before becoming effective.

All told, the budget question which became the number one legislative concern temporarily, brought the state face to face with digging into its $60-million cash balance to lay out more than $300 million during the next two years. The state biennial budget calls for outlays of $205 million. Statutory obligations come to another $77 million. Two other bills for construction and rehabilitation of state institutions and schools call for still another $24 million, partly from the post-war building fund and partly from the state general fund.

In handling over its recommendations, the budget committee made it clear that only by turning over the state cigarette tax for general fund use could the legislature even hope to keep the treasury balance at the "safe" level of $30 million by June 30, 1951.

Another house proposal to amend the constitution—to reduce the voting age from 21 to 18 years—passed and was sent to the Senate last week. The vote was 54 to 38.

While a senate bill on the standard time question lay in a house committee, the house passed 53 to 41 another time bill to lay the question before the voters. It calls for a referendum to decide whether Indiana shall be on central or eastern standard time or continue the present "two time" system in which certain areas go on daylight saving during summer months.

The senate passed unanimously a resolution to ratify an amendment to the federal constitution limiting a president to two terms. The ratification now is up to the house.

By a vote of 97 to 1 the house passed on to the senate a bill to nominate top candidates for state offices in state-wide primary elections. Other major legislation which passed the lower house and went on to the senate last week included bills to abolish the state office of public defender and to extend for another two years the law permitting women who have jobs in industry to work "around the clock."

A house resolution to provide legislative reapportionment on the basis of the whole population starting in 1953 found its way out of committee.

By committee action the senate stopped the perennial bill to put election of judges on a non-partisan basis.

Two senate concurrent resolutions were about the only action to get by both houses last week. One of them would include Indiana officially in a nationwide observance of Arbor Day. The other asks Congress to do something practical about floods along the Wabash river.

Among the new bills which flooded into both houses as the bill deadline approached was one which would put the state in the slot machine business. Introduced by Senators Edwin T. Baker, Evansville Democrat, and Leslie Thompson, Evansville Republican, the bill called for half the "take" to be applied to pay the soldiers' bonus, 15 per cent to go to the city or town where the machine was located, 20 per cent to the owner of the place where the machine was operating, and 15 per cent for operation.

INJURED IN FALL
C. J. Kline, day marshal and street department superintendent, was injured in a fall last Thursday. Mr. Kline, was on the dam, near Crosson Park, when he fell from a small platform eight feet to the rocks below the dam. He received several cuts on his head and face. X-ray pictures do not show any bones fractured, but he is still confined to his home here.

Business, Big and Little!

You cannot create a make-believe feud out of the mythical question of Big Business vs. Small Business. It won't hold up, this attempt to make "bad business" out of business that's big. We need many of them small, but we also want some of them big. I recall Emerson's fabled quarrel of the mountain and the squirrel, in which the squirrel made the point: "If I cannot carry forests on my back, neither can you crack a nut." Both big and little enterprises belong in America's system.

Out of the desire of people for goods and for services, our business exists. Private business, generally, is taken for granted. Yet, many unthinking people consider "Big Business" a certain bogeyman. They fail to see that big business is simply a lot of people doing things together that they could not do separately.

Cut Them Down?
We sometimes act as if we expected the government to whittle all big industry down to size. Yet, what would our fate have been after Pearl Harbor, without large and well-equipped industries? In war, we relied upon our bigness. And big industry was well-supported by thousands of small firms. Now, in peacetime, America looks to a well-financed and managed industrial community for continued prosperity and plentiful jobs.

A business keeps growing amid strong competition if it pleases customers by giving them what they want at fair prices. While doing this it must pay its workers a competitive wage, and also earn a profit on the money which owners of the tools have entrusted to it. If a business does these things, it may expect to grow and be of even greater service to its public. In America, any kind of business must merit public approval or fold up.

Each a Customer

Big industry can do some of the big jobs better. Suppose you had to depend upon a one-man workshop for your automobile. Experts say it would cost you $50,000 to have your car built that way. Instead, large companies manage the mass production of thousands of parts (some of which are made by small firms), so that an assembly line rolls out the cars. This requires millions of dollars of capital, and thousands of workers.

Not all business should be big. Many needs are best served by small business. Actually, these firms are not always competitors of big business. They are partners in industrial activity. Then each one, big or small, profits from the efforts of the other. Here, we'll find parts used by big firms being made by small ones. There, we'll find the material of a large producer being fabricated by a small mill. Each is a customer of the other.

Pulling Together

It is because all of us have worked, and traded together, that living standards in America are the highest in the world. Many of our biggest businesses form the base of this pyramid of prosperity, making it possible for many small businesses to grow and develop. When our enterprises, big and little, have prospered, everybody has shared in the rewards. What system could bring us more?

GIRL SCOUT NEWS

The Girl Scouts met Monday, Feb. 21. A business meeting was held, and then Jane Kroh and Janet Kitson served refreshments of "cokes and cookies." The girls made the cookies as one of the requirements of the Homemaking Badge. The week before on Valentines Day, Mrs. Anglemeyer, assistant Scout leader, served ice cream bars and a lovely Valentine cake to the girls. After that the girls "folk-danced." This is a favorite pastime of the girls and they know quite a few.
