TOMB . . . Stricken by the earthquake that struck most of Ecuador, the walls of the cathedral of Ambato caved in on 60 small children who were inside the cathedral at the time of the quake.

DETONATOR . . . At the awarding of the silver masks in Rome, Italy, an outstanding personality present was Silvana Pampanini—Miss Rome of 1947—of whom Mischa Auer, film star, said, "I swear if she came to Hollywood she would explode the atomic bomb."

"CARVING" VICTIM . . . Actress Marie Wilson dresses the chest wound of her husband, actor Allan Nixon, in midtown hotel suite in New York City. The star's husband needed 15 stitches in St. Vincent's hospital. He received the wounds during an attack upon him by two men, one of them wielding a broken bottle—and inflicted the wounds. The fight took place in a downtown cafe in New York. The actress is a busy star of the movies and radio, her current radio vehicle being "My Friend Irma."

BACHELOR'S END . . . Film star Jimmy Stewart and his bride, Gloria Hatrick Stewart, formerly Mrs. Ned McLean, depart from Los Angeles airport on their honeymoon trip aboard plane. This was the first event of their married careers. Jimmy participated in festivities of soap box derby in Akron, Ohio the week end after they were married. Later on, the film celebrity and his bride plan a more extended honeymoon in Hawaii. Stewart, before his marriage, had been listed as the most eligible bachelor in the film capital.

OIL SOURCES

Men Drilling Below Water

CHICAGO, (U.P.)—For more than a year, about 500 men have been living on islands of steel in the Gulf of Mexico, drilling for oil below the surface of the water.

Two oil men attending the annual convention of the American Petroleum Institute said the operation, known as offshore drilling, is being carried on by 15 oil companies. Their operations covers a 2,500,000-acre area from six to 20 miles off the shores of Texas and Louisiana.

The oil men said their companies have achieved "fairly good" results so far, compared with land operations which cost much less than offshore drilling.

Before underwater drilling can begin, gangs must construct their 1,500-ton steel islands by driving pilings 100 feet below the ocean bed, and extending them 30 feet in the water and 40 feet above the water's surface. Construction of the pilings costs an oil firm about $1,000,000 before drilling can start.

Crews Change Work

Offshore drilling camps then are set up on the pilings over an approximate 190-by-80-foot area. Besides the drilling platforms, each camp includes a bunkhouse and cookhouse and enough supplies to provision a 15-man crew for three weeks.

However, crews usually work for several days only and then are transported to shore for as many days off. Shifts of workers alternate around the clock all year.

The oil men said their principal headaches are the tropical storms which sweep the gulf area from May through November. However, the pilings are considered as safe as the ground on shore and the men seldom are called in from their camps atop the pilings. The pilings are built to withstand 165-mile winds and 33-foot waves.

Underwater drilling was started after geologists reported what they termed a "continental shelf" in the gulf waters. The "shelf" is composed of land which extends many miles into the water before dropping to oceanic depths.

Use Gravity Meter

American oil men in Venezuela were the first to employ offshore drilling methods and succeeded in recovering oil from depths of 100 feet below the surface of Lake Maracaibo.

Geologists use a gravity meter to outline areas which should be tested for drilling. The instrument reveals disturbed areas which show where oil may be present, but the oil men said the only sure way to test the ground is to start digging operations.

The oil men said that offshore drilling in the Gulf of Mexico was started by oil firms in an effort to augment America's crude oil supply and reserves.

Mr. and Mrs. Ira Schue, of near Oswego, are the parents of a son, Gregory Alan, born Sunday, Sept. 18, at the McDonald hospital in Warsaw. The baby weighed eight pounds and 13 ounces. Mrs. Schue is the former Marjorie Geiger, of Syracuse.

FILE DIVORCE ACTIONS
 Helene Lorraine Clayton, of route one, Syracuse, filed action for divorce in Elkhart circuit court from Frederick Clayton, charging cruelty and asking custody of their only child. They were married August 18, 1939, and separated Sept. 19, 1949.
