In Memoriam—My Dad On the main street in town. Right out on the square, was a man with a smile, never a stare. Always a word of kindness he had, with the biggest of hearts. That was my Dad. His ability to talk, all friends will admit, but they listened, because of his knowledge and wit. He loved to meet people. He loved life, and fun, his manner sincere, your friendship he won. He was interested in affairs, of the nation and state, His arguments broad, filled with vision, not hate. He was active and alert, took his part in the town, always a hand for the man who was down. The store on the corner stands just the same. But, the main stem is missing. Bill was his name. Dorothy Epperson Helen Irwin
