THE PLAY AND THE PLAYERS.

SECOND PERFORMANCE OF BEN HUR LAST NIGHT.

A Good House Greets the Second Appearance of Terre Haute's Best Amateurs—The Coming of Strauss—Notes.

The second performance of that beautiful novel of Gen. Lew Wallace, Ben Hur, was greeted with a much larger house last night than on the first presentation. The improvement in the stage management was very noticeable and consequently everything moved much more smoothly. There were some tedious waits and the orchestra seemed to be very much lacking in their cues. All these things will adjust themselves and you may expect an almost perfect performance to-night. All the parts were better portrayed and the usual nervousness of a first night was dissipated each one appearing much more at home. The audience seemed to appreciate the acting almost as well as the dances, several scenes receiving well merited applause. This was especially the case in the boat scene on the lake at the Orchard of Palms. Ira (Mrs. Helen Allen) invites Ben Hur (Douglas Smith) to ride and the acting was so perfect and the gestures so expressive that it elicited a perfect storm of applause. It is impossible owing to the limited space to recount all the really excellent performers.

While the leading parts were well sustained throughout, the same may also be said of the minor parts, for all did remarkably well. Those worthy of special mention were Miss Keeler as the mother of Ben Hur, Miss McGregor as Tizra, Miss Jean Dinges, Mrs. E. Douglas Smith as Ben Hur, Frank C. Crawford as Ilderin, and Frank Sage, as the wrestler. The parts might be better dressed in some instances, but on the whole they were very fair. The pantomime all the way through was far better than the previous performance, and the stage setting was greatly improved.

The dances, as on the opening night, were in the lead in the hearts of the audience. They were all much better rendered and the same was also true of the drill. Two new dances were added to the programme, the Nautch dance by the Misses May DaMond, Elsie Hudson and Mollie Kussner, and the black-bird dance by a bevy of little misses. Both were excellently rendered and elicited considerable applause. The most artistic dance in the entire performance was the Nautch and Miss May DaMond made quite a hit in it. She also scored quite a success in the cancan dance. Miss DaMond is undoubtedly the most graceful and artistic dancer in the cast, although the others have a horde of admirers.

The performance is one that grows upon you and you should see it several times to fully appreciate the merits of the many beautiful tableaux. Anyone familiar with the text of the book can more thoroughly understand it.

The closing scene last night was one of the prettiest stage pictures ever seen in our city, and was a credit to the managers. Prof. Meville left last night for New Albany, where Ben Hur will next make his appearance. The hit of the evening was the Black Bird dance.
