THE GREATEST OF THE GREAT SHOWS COMING TO TERRE HAUTE, ON SATURDAY, JULY 27.

"The elephant he goes round, the band begins to play; Boys about the monkey cage, you'd better keep away."

Or, to put it in plain prose, on the date named the great Seven-Elephant Railroad show of the Sells Bros., is to exhibit in this place, bringing a menagerie and circus of unexcelled proportions, variety and excellence, on its own special trains, it being altogether too big a thing in the animal and arena way to be transported on wagons. The entire press of every city and town where it has exhibited unite in emphatically pronouncing it entirely unequalled in all, while the elegance of the performances and the excellence of its management are equally praised. The papers make mention of the unusual fact that every feature announced is honorably presented, and what those remarkable attractions are may be partly gathered in the following after notice by the influential and candid journal, the Oil City Daily Derrick:

"Sells Brothers' Seven Elephant Railroad Show gave two exhibitions here yesterday, to immense audiences. The street parade in the morning was the best ever witnessed here, and the line of the procession was crowded with people, who admired and laughed at the wonderful and comical features of the turnout. Everything was shown as advertised, including the seven elephants, and some extras thrown in. A gigantic black bear on top of one of the tableaux cars was recognized as a friend and a brother by his namesakes in the Oil Exchange, and greeted with approving howls as he passed. An elephant on a car drawn by a drove of camels was another striking feature of the parade. The tent show was first class in every respect. In the menagerie was perhaps the finest collection of animals on the road, embracing rare specimens of birds and beasts, in excellent condition, and presenting a far different appearance from the jaded and mangy beasts in many so-called menageries. The ring performance showed many artists of more than common dexterity and strength, the leaping, tumbling and trapeze acts being especially noteworthy. Willis Cobb's performing dogs were wonderfully trained. The clowns were funny without being vulgar, and the audience generally testified their appreciation in hearty applause. A novel form of Orchestra chairs was used for reserved seats, which surpasses anything of the

QUITE a number of those persons who were sunstruck, are yet very feeble, and unable to be out, and several of the more severe cases are in danger. A prominent physician states that it is even now the case, that sunstroke effects an injury that is felt for a long time following, and sometimes the unfortunate never fully recovers from its terribly weakening force.

A MARE'S NEST.

From the Indianapolis Sentinel.

The aid of the associated press was invoked yesterday to distribute the startling information from Terre Haute that that wonderful sheet, the Express, presided over by Major O. J. Smith, had made a discovery. Later, a special train brought to this city the entire edition of the paper, numbering some eighty three copies, when an alleged fraud, in all its hideousness, was laid bare. The Express asserts that on the vote taken upon the passage of the state house bill, March 1, 1876 "the returns" as made by the clerk were "doctored," and publishes a pretended fac simile as furnishing proof positive. The substance of the matter is about as follows: Several votes were taken upon the passage of the bill, the measure failing on account of the lack of the constitutional majority, fifty-one votes being required. During the contest there were always several absentees or "doctors," but when the matter came upon its final passage, March 1, the vote was fifty-two to forty, two more than the constitutional majority and a clear majority of thirteen.

The basis of the bugaboo of the Express is contained in cards signed by W. A. Conley, then representative from Vigo, and John Dannattell, member from Vanderburg, who claim that had their votes been properly recorded, a tie would have resulted March 1, thus defeating the state house appropriation. With regard to the former it is only necessary to state the pretended fac simile of the Express gives the vote of Conley in the negative, and that is probably answer enough. Mr. Dannattell is asserted not to have voted at all, while his vote is said to be recorded in the affirmative. He states that he was not here March 1, but there may be a woeful lack of memory. It must be recollected that votes on the measure were taken time and again, and how he can remember this particular date is at least a little curious. The seat of the Vanderburg member was so often vacant that he frequently had to be introduced to his compeers upon his return, and this sudden discovery of a memory in this particular case discounts Edison.

A word in this connection in regard to the animus of the Express will show the utter flimsiness of the canard and the motives which actuate its editor. The paper is the pretended organ for labor for the starving poor, and, as is reported in Terre Haute, pays its employees in depreciated orders on second class grocery stores. It howls without ceasing for more money to do the business of the country, and yet when a moiety of that which can be collected without being felt to be put in circulation in payment for honest labor it proceeds to throw slime. All this in view of the fact that the state house commissioners have resolved that all material for the new state house is to be purchased within the borders of the state. There is even a strong probability that the stone to be used will be quarried in the congressional district where the Express is published, and iron establishments in its own city may receive a portion of the benefits. It is not a question as to whether the state house shall be built that gnaws into the cranium of the editor of the Express, but a question as to how far he can use this hobby to ride in to a little political prominence at the next session of the legislature.
