To Wear Or Not To Wear Pants

LAFAYETTE—To wear or not to wear pants is a question that every woman should answer — honestly. This is particularly true for professional or para-professional women who are in the public eye, said Dr. Jean Goodrick, extension clothing and textiles specialist at Purdue university.

These women are setting examples that may influence what others think to be appropriate dress.

Dress shows a definite trend toward relaxation. Comfort and utility often seem to take priority over aesthetic appeal, says Dr. Goodrick. Although this can be justified, a pleasing appearance shows that a woman cares about herself, is concerned about the way she looks and prefers not to make others feel uncomfortable in her presence.

The number of women who look genuinely attractive in pants is somewhat limited. However, some women who have less than perfect proportions may be able to wear pants quite successfully provided they show the same good taste in their choice of fabric and design for pants as for other types of outer wear.

Some fabrics are more revealing than others. A clinging fabric of high formability conforms to irregular body formations and makes them quite obvious. Such fabrics also reveal the surface characteristics of some foundation garments worn underneath.

Optimum fit in pants contributes immeasurably to the appearance of the wearer. When buying or constructing pants, one should check carefully the width and depth of the crotch, the height of the front and back rise, and the amount of ease in the hip and thigh areas. Demanding figure characteristics require custom fitting to achieve a smooth, neat look.

Dr. Goodrick says the styles in pants and pant suits may be categorized much the same as those of outer wear. There are pants for lounging, sleep, work at home, work away from home, play, evening, and even for weddings.

The degree of professionalism a woman wishes to project on the job should determine the style of a pant suit she wears to work. A tailored outfit of matching or coordinating fabrics generally shows a degree of professionalism appropriate for the job.

If one is in doubt about the choice of a pant suit, especially for work, she should take a long, honest look in the mirror and make an honest appraisal of her appearance, says Dr. Goodrick. If she is still in doubt, it might be wise to consider other types of outer wear.

It is generally safe to assume that a current fashion should be adopted with extreme care — only if it is compatible with the individual's body characteristics and the activity for which it is intended.
