IU flag stolen

Milford Town Marshall Dave Hobbs reported that a thief cut the rope on Bill Little's flagpole at his residence on South Main Street in Milford and stole his Indiana University flag. The theft occurred late Saturday night or early Sunday morning.

Last stand of chestnut trees

If you've planted a chestnut seedling in the past 10 years, or ever want to, you probably have 85-year-old James Comp or Ward Taylor, 77, to thank, says National Wildlife magazine. For the past decade, they and their army of senior citizens, Boy Scouts, conservationists, and prison laborers have salvaged a quarter of a million chestnuts from one of America's last stand of chestnut trees along Michigan's eastern shore. From the early 1900s to the 1950s a lethal fungus imported from Japan nearly wiped out this American tradition.

Bill Little has offered a reward for information leading to recovery of his property, which was valued at $60. Persons with information should contact the Milford Police Department, telephone 658-4941.

Hobbs stated that this type of thievery has been a continuing problem for Little, who is well-known for his support of Indiana University. There is no humor involved as it gets expensive to replace the property.

Annual ritual

Nature photographers, get prepared! Come fall, National Wildlife magazine says you'll have the chance to take pictures of one of the country's most accessible wildlife spectacles: the annual elk rutting ritual at Yellowstone National Park. If you go, you won't be alone. Dozens of American photographers return to the park for this spectacle every year.
