An Indiana Case

John H. Morris,
Gardner, Ind.
says: "I had an attack of kidney complaint which laid me up for several days. My back was so sore and lame I couldn't get up or down. My back ached so I wasn't able to stand up straight. I lay down, propped myself up and then trying to straighten, a shooting pain like the thrust of a knife went through my side and loins. I had been a lot about Doan's Kidney Pills and started taking them. Two boxes fixed me up in fine shape."

CONGRESS FACES HUGE TASK

Measures Postponed on Account of Consideration of Peace Treaty Now to Get Attention—Youthful Gardener's Will Surpass work of Preceding Years.

By JAMES P. HORNADAY.

Washington.—If there is anyone in public life who knows just what station the United States occupies in the family of nations since the second rejection of the treaty of peace with Germany he is not talking out loud. The new secretary of state, Baldwin Cobey, realizes that he will have many unusual international problems to deal with so long as the United States declines to go along with her allies in the war in making peace with Germany and Austria, and he does not hesitate to express himself. On the surface of things cordial relations between the United States and all the governments of the world, even including Germany and Austria, will be maintained, but it is well understood by all persons acquainted with international usages that so long as the United States withholds its assent to world peace strained relations to a certain extent are bound to exist.

The League of Nations is, of course, already going concern to some extent, but every nation that has joined the league realizes that unless the United States shall eventually become a member, the league scheme for preserving world peace will sooner or later go to pieces. It is inevitable, according to the best informed statesmen, that if the United States should decide to go it alone in world affairs other great nations would be obliged to recast their plans for the future.

Alliances Will Be Formed.

What will happen in case the United States shall eventually decide to stay out of the league, so well-informed statesmen say, is that offensive and defensive alliances will be formed by the other great powers. This means that the world will drop back to the general defensive and offensive policies that prevailed prior to 1914. The secret treaty will, it is asserted, be revived and sooner or later every great power will be suspecting the motives of nearly every other great power.

Most of the people of the United States, it is believed, by persons who are in position to speak with some authority, will continue to insist that the United States become a member of the League of Nations. Persons who take this view confidently believe that if the issue of a league or no league could be submitted to a referendum vote there would be no question about the league receiving a preliminary majority, but the difficulty is to get the question before the people in any concrete form. It is generally assumed that if nothing is done with the treaty with Germany between now and June, each of the old political parties will insert in its national platform a plank favoring a League of Nations. If this is done, it is pointed out, any election result would throw no guiding light on the minor questions affecting the treaty, the questions over which the senate split. The latest information from abroad is that the European nations which have already become members of the League of Nations will take a patient attitude with respect to the situation that exists in this country and will keep the league door open for the United States.

Congress May Adjourn in June.

Now that the senate has returned the treaty of peace with Germany to President Wilson there will be an opportunity for that body to dispose of a large accumulation of business. The senate was in possession of the treaty a little more than eight months and throughout that period it postponed action on all legislation except that which called for immediate attention. It did find time to pass the bill returning the railroads to their owners and it has disposed of a good deal of unimportant legislation, but in a large way it laid aside for future action pretty much everything of importance proposed during the eight months.

The body has planned to join with the house of representatives to bring this session to an end about June 1, so as to get out of the way of the national political conventions, and the leaders realize that if this is to be done no time can be wasted from now on.

A little later the steering committee of the senate and house will decide just what legislation shall be put through between now and the conventions. It is inevitable that a good many important matters will go over until after the presidential election, which means that they will not be taken up until the last session of this congress, which will begin on the first Monday of next December. Neither of the political parties as represented in congress is particularly anxious to explore new legislative fields on the eve of a presidential election; the prevailing tendency is to play safe and wait until after the voters have spoken.

What to do with the government-owned merchant marine is also a question that is pressing for an answer. It looks now as if the answer might be delayed until after the election. Regardless of political affiliations, senators and representatives are divided on the question as to whether the merchant marine should be government-owned or owned privately. The senate committee on commerce is still listening to persons who have thoughts about what should be done with the ships, but apparently is far from coming to a decision or a recommendation.

In the meantime, it is the policy of the shipping board to sell ships whenever fair prices can be obtained. During the last six months the government has parted with a large number of ships it built during the war.

Army Reorganization.

Army reorganization legislation will, it now seems probable, be completed before adjournment is taken. It is absolutely necessary in the judgment of the war department that this legislation shall be in force by the beginning of the fiscal year July 1. The house has passed a reorganization bill and the senate committee on military affairs is now giving that bill consideration. While the recommendations of the war department are in a general way carried out by the house bill, the bill as a whole falls considerably short of the aspirations at the department. The failure to make any provision for universal training or for a reserve army is particularly disappointing to the general staff. There are probably enough votes in the senate to put a universal training provision in the bill, but senators realize that the house would not accept it and so the probability is that the senate will not delay the passage of the bill by attaching any such provision. It is believed that the senate will take a somewhat more liberal attitude with respect to army legislation than did the house.

At the hardest not congress has to crack relates to legislation that will take care of the welfare of the soldiers and sailors of the world war. Some expression on this subject, it seems, will have to be made before the session comes to an end.

INTEREST AROUSED IN GARDENING.

The United States school garden army which enlisted a million boys and girls in the war time and two million and a half last year has perfected plans to make the summer of 1920 surpass all preceding years in number of children enrolled in home gardens and in amount of land cultivated and products harvested, and in aroused interest in everything that comes from healthful work on the soil.

In an announcement covering the work for 1920, Director John L. Randall of the interior department says:

"With the coming of a new year the problems that confront us are to increase the numbers in the United States school garden army to make the garden work more permanent, and to increase its educational value. The motto of the garden army—'A garden for every child—every child in a garden'—can only be realized when gardening becomes a definite part of school work.

"The president recognized the value of school-supervised gardening by making it a productive line of defense during the period of the nation's need. Congress has appreciated the service of garden leaders to the country and has recognized the permanent value of this work by granting an appropriation to continue the United States school garden army. This is a work not for ourselves or any organization, but one devoted in a spirit of service to the education of children."

INTEREST IS GENERAL.

The 1919 record of the school garden army reveals that the qualities of pluck, perseverance, and "stick-to-itiveness" were demonstrated in almost the same degree by the children of every section—from New York city, where 60,654 children raised garden products worth $715,175.71, to the quiet little mountain town of Montezuma, Colo., where the garden flag waves over the "great divide" and from Minneapolis, Minn., acre, to Corpus Christi, Tex., where the children combated successfully the devastation of storm and tidal wave.

Although the financial returns of school-supervised gardening—$48,000 in 1919—sound sufficiently impressive in the aggregate, the 50,000 garden teachers of the United States are a unit in believing that the lessons of self-government, organization, individual responsibility, thrift, and community effort which the children have gained from their garden work have been far above all tangible results. Nevertheless financial results are important, and a nationwide review of the tangible results of school-supervised gardening cannot fail to be of significance to those who have co-operated by furnishing money assistance and awards, trophies, and prizes.

EFFORTS CROWNED WITH SUCCESS.

The total value of the garden products in different cities varies greatly because of climatic conditions, amount of land available for gardening, and adverse weather conditions. But despite such drawbacks as storm and drought, the children's work in practically every instance was crowned with success. Intensive cultivation was called into play to offset dry periods, and although replanting was necessary at times, the children never faltered. In fact, the children learned "to make such unpleasant effort as life later on is sure to require of them."

Chicago reports 90,000 children enrolled in garden work who produced an average value for each child of $5. Cleveland, O., had 7,840 home gardens, covering an area of 85 acres, and 415 large tracts totaling 90 acres. The estimated value of the 175 acres cultivated by school children, was $79,833.

WHAT A MOTHER SAYS

Cleveland, Ohio.—"During pregnancy I was sick for three or four months, my strength left me and I became weak and miserable. I began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and my strength returned very rapidly, and I felt very well the remainder of the time. My baby was a very strong, healthy child and always has been. I would especially recommend 'Favorite Prescription' to the expectant mother."—Mrs. Bessie Baumgardner, 233 7th St., E.

Cleveland, Ohio.—"I think Dr. Pierce's medicines are all fine. I have given the 'Favorite Prescription' to my daughters when they were growing into womanhood and it proved very beneficial to them. We have also used the 'Golden Medicinal Discovery' as a tonic and blood purifier, and it proved equally as beneficial as the 'Favorite Prescription.' I take pleasure in recommending these good medicines of Dr. Pierce's."—Mrs. J. H. Walls, 1766 E. 16th Pl.

WAS RUN DOWN, NERVOUS

Ashtabula, Ohio.—"Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is an excellent woman's tonic. I was run down, weak and nervous and was feeling very bad when I began taking 'Favorite Prescription' and I must say it was very quick in giving me relief and building me up in health and strength."—Mrs. Emma Schulz, 144 West St.
