

MASSAPEE INDIANS.

The Taunton (Massachusetts) Free Press, says, "We perceive by the Barnstable papers, that the difficulties with this tribe have been adjusted, for the present by committing Apes and three or four other ringleaders of the insurrection, to prison. There can be no doubt of the expediency and propriety of dealing with the tribe as mildly as circumstances will admit, and using every effort to redress their wrongs, if any exist; but we cannot accede to the position taken by some who have noticed the subject, that the State has no right to interfere with them, except so far as they themselves consent, or as one of our contemporaries more broadly states it, that 'their title to independence of the control of this State, is far more valid than any ever urged in favor of an independent government of Southern Indians.' The right of property is one thing—and that no doubt is fully secured to them by the terms of the confirmation of their grant; the right of sovereignty is another and a very different thing—given up indeed, impliedly, by the very fact of their consenting to receive a confirmation of their title from the government of the Old Colony. Those who are most zealous in defending the claims of the Cherokee Indians, would be very sorry, we think, to have them put on the same footing with the reduced anomalous tribes, whose relics are scattered over the New England States. Chancellor Kent, one of the warmest friends of the Cherokees, admits that these remnants are not nations, in any sense of the term, nor possessed of any exclusive right of self government, at the same time that he for other reasons, considers the Cherokees as possessing such a right. There is this broad distinction to be taken between the conduct of Massachusetts and Georgia, from the year 1768, when the Massapee Indians were first put under guardianship to the present time. It is this: our government interfered to protect—Georgia to despoil. Massachusetts has saved the Aborigines so far from the depredations of her own subjects; Georgia (in her sovereign capacity) has led the way to plunder, and left all private rapacity far in the background. Those who reserved this tract expecting that it would realize the most cherished dream of our forefathers in being an asylum for a community of praying heathens, were indeed miserably mistaken; the vineyard which was planted by Baume, and watered and fertilized for many a year by the pious Hawley, has indeed run to waste and barrenness. Some evils such as are incident to all human concerns, have doubtless existed and do exist in its management, and it is well that they should be brought to light and rectified. But if our venerable old commonwealth is ever to be charged with oppression or improper interference, the cry should never come from those who but for her would long since have bared every rood of their birthright for a few barrels of rum; and who, if their inheritance were now given up to them in a fee, would in ten years time have no inheritance left to squabble for."

A FUGITIVE ARRESTED.—We noticed on the 19th ult. the sudden and mysterious disappearance of a cabin passenger of the ship Helen, from Liverpool. We now understand, that Redmond J. O'Donovan, late a broker and corn merchant of Sligo, Ireland, by means of forged bills of lading, obtained from William and Robert Baird, merchants, of Liverpool, and from a house in London, about 16000 sterling, and fled to this country by the ship Helen, arrived at this port on the 10th ult. A passenger in the Silas Richards, arrived on Sunday, sent in the pursuit of said O'Donovan, by the houses in England, with the assistance of Mr. Webb, of Congress Hall, to whom he had mentioned the circumstances, succeeded in arresting him. He had boarded at Mr. Webb's a few days after his arrival, but had left there previous to his arrest. The officers found in his trunk a bank book in the name of John Dellin, by which it was discovered that he had deposited $8000 in the U. S. State Bank in this city, which sum was paid over by his order to the agent of the defrauded houses.

VINCENNES, July 27.

During the last week most of the men composing Captain Beckes' Company of Rangers have returned, and are once more at home. We welcome them most heartily, and are rejoiced that they have enjoyed good health on their late campaign.

Although this corps has not had an opportunity of signaling themselves in the service of their country, yet we are well satisfied, that if an opportunity had presented itself, Captain Beckes' Company would not have been found wanting in the hour of trial. From our own knowledge of the men, their standing at home, and the character given to them by their officers, we feel warranted in saying, that a more efficient company could not be found. We are sorry to know, that a considerable degree of dissatisfaction exists among the men, towards their Captain. Of the cause, we are, if not entirely ignorant, yet possessed of such confused and unsatisfactory information, that we refrain from giving any particulars, but hope that if there is a just cause of complaint, it will be removed by those whose duty it is to do it.

Capt. Ford's Company of Rangers has been discharged at Fort Gibson, Arkansas Territory. A number of the men have passed through here on their way home. We learn from them that they were paid off on the day they were discharged.
