AFFECTATION.

Why, Affectation, why this mock grimace?
Go, silly thing, and hide that simp'ring face,
Thy lisping prattle, and thy mincing gait,
All thy false mimic fooleries I hate;
For thou art Folly's counterfeit, and she
Who is right foolish hath the better plea;
Nature's true idiot I prefer to thee,
Why that soft languish? Why that drawling tone?
Art sick? art sleepy? Get thee home? begone.
I laugh at all thy pretty baby tears,
Those flutt'ring, faintings, and unreal fears,
Can they deceive us? Can such mum'm'ries move,
Touch us with pity, or inspire with love;
No, Affectation, vain is all thy art!
Those eyes may wander over every part,
They'll never find their passage to the heart.

From the Baltimore Patriot. GREGOR M-GREGOR.

Having observed in your paper of Friday an article from Norfolk, relating to Sir Gregor M-Gregor's having abandoned the cause of the Venezuelans, "after finding all his endeavors to establish any thing like concert, discipline or regular government among them, to be utterly unavailing," I am induced to state a few particulars relative to this person, from which you may deduce the probable utility of which he has ever been to the cause in question.

M-Gregor arrived in La-Guayra, some time towards the middle of the year 1811. He announced himself as a Scotchman of rank, who had served in the Peninsula.—It was with difficulty that the interpreter prevented the absurdity of his landing, preceded by a Scotch bag-piper in full blast; but his servants clad in the Highland costume attracted sufficient curiosity. M-Gregor for some time after his arrival did not find the military employment, which appears to have been his object in visiting the Maine; but during his stay at Carraccas he made himself remarkable alone for some English propensities, such as constant displays of horsemanship, a strenuous affection for the bottle, &c but above all, his bag piper was an inexhaustible source of wonder, or disgust, to the musically refined inhabitants of Carraccas.

In the threatened civil convulsions which were about to explode when the earthquake took place in March, 1812, M-Gregor could take no part, as he had no employment, and was ignorant of the situation, the manners and language of the country. To Miranda he attached himself, and from him obtained, on the invasion of the province from the side of Coro by the Spanish Royalists, under Monteverde, the command of a few hundred cavalry, whom, after the most ill-judged manoeuvring in the face of the enemy, he contrived to lead into an ambuscade, where the greater part of them were slain, or taken prisoners, he himself escaping with great difficulty. His ill-conduct on this occasion was notorious, and there were not wanting, those who accused him of absolute inebriety on the day he lost his cavalry, as well as that he was seldom otherwise, when there was a probability of being engaged. The writer of this knows, that this mischance threw him completely into disgrace at the time, and was one of the chain of causes which induced Miranda in the month of July, 1812, to surrender the country to an inferior force.

M-Gregor escaped with various others, through the capitulation made by Miranda, and he is stated to have been at Carthage-na when that place surrendered to Morillo.—But it is credibly asserted, that his propensity to intemperance had not left him, and he certainly never has possessed the talents necessary to lead an army, or to organize a system of things fit for a country struggling through the horrors of of an exterminating civil war.

Among those who are at the hand of the Patriotic party in that part of Spanish America, is Arismendi, of the Island of Margarita, a plain, sensible man, whose energies have been called into action by the deliberate murder of many of his relations, by the Royalists. Bolivar, whose family before the troubles, possessed the largest landed property in Venezuela, and who appears to be considered the chief, is a man of unquestionable courage, directed by but middling abilities. When by the assistance of new Grenada, Bolivar was enabled in 1813, to drive the Royalists out of Carraccas, the exterminating war which has deluged that country with blood, was commenced, and may possibly, with too much shew of truth be attributed to him. Certain it is, that his short possession of authority, enabled Rivas, the Marat of that country to commit the most horrible enormities against the Royalists.

Of the other leaders the only one with whom I am acquainted is Soublett, who signs himself Major General in one of the bulletins from the province of Cumana.—This young man, now about 28 years of age was one of Maranda's aids in the disastrous campaign of 1812. He is a native of Caracas, and perhaps unites more of the qualifications necessary to enable him to go through the part he is acting, than any engaged in the contest. He is intelligent, active, humane, virtuous and brave. If M-Gregor is, as he was in 1812, his coming in contact with such a man as this, is a sufficient explanation to my mind of the cause of his retiring from the contest. A few months will decide these opinions.

New Olive Branch.

It is recollected, that during the last war Matthew Carey of Philadelphia, published a very popular pamphlet, entitled "The Olive Branch, or Faults on both sides."—This Essay related exclusively to political parties, and was so much read that it rapidly ran through several editions. Mr. Carey has seized the same idea, in relation to religious feuds, and is about to publish, "The Religious Olive Branch, or Faults on (nearly) all sides." It is to be put to press in the month of May, and published in July or August—and to be embellished with 40 engravings, illustrating the various scenes of horror, perpetrated by persecutors, whether Roman Catholics, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, etc. etc. Richmond Compiler.

Worcester Feb. 19.—We learn from Smithfield, (R. I.) that on the evening of the 4th instant a man by the name of Thomas Guley, perished with the cold.—He had been to Providence with a team; and on his return he had proceeded but about a mile from the last place at which he stopped, when, (as there are certain indications) finding himself cold with riding, he jumped from his sled, but was already so benumbed, that he was unable to proceed far and fell into the snow beside the road, where he was found dead the next morning.

On the same evening a labouring man left Aldrich's Tavern in Smithfield, for his home, about two miles distant, but was not able to reach it before he perished.—His body was found the next day near a tree, from which, it appeared, he had with his feet, beaten the bark, in a fruitless struggle to warm himself.

Another person was found in Smithfield, the same evening, almost dead with the cold; but upon being taken to a house, he with proper treatment recovered.
