Friendship

And is there aught can soften woe?
Or lighten sorrow's galling load?
Or cause the heart with joy to glow,
Or smooth life's dreary, rugged road?

Ah! yes a sympathizing friend,
That choicest blessing here below,
The sweetest gift kind heaven can send
Will soften all the cares we know.

Then grant me but this friend so dear,
To whom I may my sorrows tell,
Who sheds the sympathetic tear,
With whom the tender feelings dwell.

Eve Fire Side.

BALTIMORE, March 23.

Live and Learn—A number of mercantile men in Philadelphia have associated to form a company to transmit goods from that city to Pittsburgh, in seven days, by establishing a train of waggons and relays of horses, which are to travel night and day without intermission, in the manner of the mail stages—We know that it is an obvious and a practicable plan deserving the immediate attention of the merchants of this city—About 20 years ago, it took a waggon one month to travel from Glasgow to London, about 300 miles, but the journey is now accomplished in a week, exactly by the means proposed by the Philadelphians—As Baltimore is nearer to Pittsburgh by at least 50 miles, our waggons should complete their journey in less time and at less expense—And as the people on the banks of the Ohio are endeavoring to obtain their foreign goods by the way of New Orleans, it has become incumbent on the Atlantic merchants to use proper means of conveying their goods as cheaply and as expeditiously as possible, to their customers in the Western countries.

Receipt for the Cure of the Sore Throat.

Take half a pound of figs, put them into a quart of spring water, and let them simmer over a slow fire till better than one half is wasted. In the mean time take a large lemon, cut into slices, and between every slice put some brown sugar candy, and let it stand before the fire to roast. Then strain the figs, and squeeze them through a coarse cloth; put the juice of the lemon into it, and let the person gargle his throat with it warm.

Wholesome Almonition.

When I see a lad of sixteen, spending his time in hearing and relating every idle tale that is told, running to taverns and stores, trifling in conversation, making bold assertions, giving his opinion of men he never saw & of things of which he is totally ignorant; clamouring against well regulated communities, setting the laws at defiance—insulting his superiors, captious among his equals and abusive to his inferiors—“thinks I to myself,” my lad you have too much sail, and unless you make a short tack, you will go on the beam ends, for there are breakers a head. Now my good fellow, I will just give you a little bit of advice. Instead of listening to idle tales, read useful books, such as geography, history, and above all others, your bible, that you may treasure up useful knowledge. Instead of loitering at taverns and stores, work at whatever your business may be with diligence whether agricultural or mechanical, and be economical as well as industrious. In conversation give place to those whose experience may instruct, and whose wisdom may enlighten. Always be more ready to hear than to speak. Never give an opinion of men or things hastily, speak evil of no man. Reverence the laws. Treat your superiors respectfully, your equals courteously and your inferiors tenderly. By such a course you will gain the esteem of the virtuous, and the respect of even the vicious.
