

POETICAL ASYLUM.

From the Palladium of Liberty.
THE VOYAGE OF LIFE.

Man is a wand'ring pilgrim here,
A traveler in this world of woe;
A mariner on life's rough sea,
Expos'd to all the storms that blow.

Temptations sanguine spread his sails,
And inexperience takes the helm;
False hopes send a deceitful gale,
And disappointments overwhelm.

Wreck'd on the rocks of deep remorse,
He naked, gains a dreary strand,
Where sad repentance holds her court,
And horror takes him by the hand.

Shame and confusion bow his head,
He gazes round in wild despair,
Looks back upon the voyage of life,
And curses all that bro't him there.

Then shall he die, and sink beneath,
So vast and cumbrous load of woe?
Is there no pitying hand to help,
None to avert the awful blow?

Yes there is ONE; O wand'rer turn,
Accept the proffer'd hand of God;
His blood shall wash thy stain away,
His mercy break the scourging rod.

ERIEUS.

"The Holy League."

We know there is a party in the United States who interest themselves in making the people believe that the "Millenium" will surely flow from the league that has recently been formed among the despots of Europe. The same clergymen who have raved furiously against our democratic administration for infidelity—the same laymen who thought it unbecoming a moral and religious people to rejoice in American victories over great Britain—indeed many of the same persons who at this time find it very convenient to bury the harp of party spirit, are forever dwelling on the great blessings that are to overflow the world in consequence of the written stipulations that have been entered into by the "magnanimous" and "christian" potentates of Europe. A new era (they tell us) is opening—religion is now to flourish beyond all former precedent—universal peace is to prevail the world! This is a very plausible theme for the friends of monarchy: it answers the double purpose of convincing the world that there is nothing good which does not emanate from crowned heads—that means such as these must be blessed, because set on foot by "legitimate kings," and of opening to full view the wickedness and infidelity of a republican government, who can have no part nor lot in so good a matter. We do not present the following extract for the purpose of weaning such people from their kingly affections; for we believe the document it contains would only serve more strongly to rivet their feelings in favor of the Holy League—because they are prompted more by their hostility to all freedom than by their affection for any religious or benevolent object—but we publish it to set right those who may be deluded by long faced hypocrisy into the belief that there is something virtuous, something good and praiseworthy in what is termed the "Holy League."

From the Madrid Gazette, the Spanish official paper.

The times are at hand in which the Courts of London, Vienna, and Petersburg, are about to act upon their true intentions, and to acknowledge that their is no duty for royal establishments in Europe, if another independent government should be suffered to exist in South America. Such a government would always be a standing temptation and an obvious object of desire to all other people who would begin to think that kings were less necessary, when held at hand such an example of a people governing themselves."

Here is the true secret of the holy league—a league of crowned heads to suppress all free governments—a league to enforce the "necessity" of kings—a league to convert the great mass of mankind into slaves and bootmen—a league to destroy every republic which is a "standing temptation" for mankind to wish to be free. Such being the object of this league, no wonder the sticklers for monarchy are pleased with it; but it would much better become them to profess their admiration on the real, than on any assumed ground. As honest men they should say at once—"The holy league deserves our praise, not because it is intended to benefit the interests of religion and humanity, but because it is a league against all democratic or republican governments, which ever have been to us odious as a witch."
